A TRIP TO EUROPE

At VOGUE'S Expense

THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS IN PRIZES

VOGUE is going to distribute thousands of dollars in cash, or in steamship tickets and hotel bills, during the year 1907, to those who are willing to give a little of their spare time to its service.

OUR OFFER
IS AS FOLLOWS

FIRST PRIZES OF $300

To anyone who, on or before 31 August, 1907, sends us one hundred and twenty-five yearly subscriptions to Vogue, at $4.00 a year, we will send return tickets from New York to London, Paris or Berlin; pay hotel bills for two weeks, and give a cash allowance of $70.00 for expenses. If the winner of such a trip prefers, we will send a check for $300 in lieu of the European trip; or we will provide return tickets to any one of the foregoing cities, or to any large city in Italy, Switzerland or Germany, and pay in cash as an expense allowance the difference between their cost and $300. Should the winners be in a position to stay longer than two weeks, they may make any arrangements for doing so they see fit, provided only that the return ticket be used within one year from the date of sailing from New York. Winners of this trip may travel second-class, if they desire, receiving in cash as an extra allowance the difference between the price of a first and second-class passage.

SECOND PRIZES OF $200

To each person who, within the specified time, sends us one hundred subscriptions, we will send a check for $200. We will provide second-class tickets to the European cities mentioned above on similar conditions, should the winner of a second prize so desire.

THIRD PRIZES OF $100

For seventy-five subscriptions, we will send a check for $100.

Should a contestant exceed the number required for a second or third prize, but fall short of the next higher prize number, we will pay for each subscription obtained at the average rate offered for the prize number exceeded —thus, we will pay $248 for 124 subscriptions, and $132 for 99.

BONUSES TO THOSE WHO FAIL TO WIN PRIZES

To those who do not succeed in securing seventy-five subscriptions, but who have sent us fifty or more, we will pay $1.00 for each subscription entered. To those who are unable to reach the fifty mark, we will pay our regular agents' commission of sixty cents apiece.

Every subscription must be accompanied by $4.00 in cash. Renewals of subscriptions already in force will not be counted in prize awards.

To our European readers the reverse of this offer will hold good—i.e., we will give them a trip to New York on the same conditions.

CHANCES OF SUCCESS UNUSUALLY GOOD

Vogue is a particularly easy magazine to canvass for. Most of the leading magazines have been canvassed to death; but this is absolutely the first time in its history that Vogue has ever made a general offer in order to increase its subscription lists.

PEOPLE IN SMALL TOWNS HAVE WON OUR PRIZES

Contestants need not be residents of big cities to win our prizes. A dressmaker in Bradford, Pa., won a trip to Paris in connection with a trial offer which we made to a limited number of persons in order to test our plan, in a surprisingly short time—and Bradford is a city of only 16,000 inhabitants. In fact, it is to residents of small places that Vogue is most useful, for it tells them all about the things that are being worn, done, and sanctioned as proper in the metropolis and the great centres, bringing, in a way, the world of fashion to those who are unable to go to it themselves.

CONTESTANTS HAVE A FREE HAND

Vogue imposes no restrictions in this contest. It simply asks that the subscriptions be new and established as genuine by cash remittance. Contestants may make any arrangements they see fit as to assistants, and share their prizes with others, if they choose. They are also welcome to win as many prizes as they can.

ACCURATE RECORD SYSTEM

Each contestant will be assigned a record number and will be furnished with a booklet containing 125 subscription blanks, with perforated stubs, each blank bearing the contestant's number. These blanks, when signed and forwarded to us, will be entered and filed under their corresponding numbers, and there will thus be no possibility of due credit not being given to the proper person for each subscription sent in. Vogue hopes that no contestant who has once entered will give up until he or she has won at least a third prize; but the stubs of these subscription booklets will be honored at any time on verification at the rates mentioned above; viz.: if less than 50 subscriptions have been sent us, 60 cents each; 50 and more, but less than 75, $1.00 each.

SEND US REFERENCES AS TO YOUR STANDING AND WE WILL ENTER YOUR NAME AT ONCE AS A CONTESTANT. IF YOU CANNOT SECURE ENOUGH SUBSCRIBERS TO WIN A PRIZE YOU WILL BE WELL PAID FOR EVERY ORDER YOU GET. THIS IS A COMPETITION IN WHICH YOU ARE BOUND TO WIN.

DAVIS

EAST INDIA HOUSE

373 BOYLSTON STREET BOSTON

TOWN & COUNTRY, October 20, 1906:—
"The French alchemist Tecla is famed for his success in producing an indestructible pearl that in every essential is equal to that produced by the action of nature."

THE NEW YORK MAIL AND EXPRESS, November 6, 1906:—
"The chief result of their advent was that rubies became non-negotiable assets in the loan market: this gem more precious than the diamond, was rejected in the pawnshop."

THE WORLD, November 5, 1906:—
"The rubies, it is known, are made of alumnia powdered and melted at an intense heat, and passed through a special machine from which emerges the globules which are afterward polished as gems."

THE GLOBE, November 9, 1906:—
"They are said to be not only identical in composition with the natural gems, but to resemble them so exactly in appearance and properties that they are indistinguishable from the latter."

THE GLOBE, Nov 9, 1906:—
"The trade in such gems will be entirely at the mercy of the laboratory jeweler, providing, of course, that the process of manufacture is reasonably inexpensive."

TECLA'S RECONSTRUCTED GEMS

NEW YORK HERALD, October 28, 1906:—
"The life work and achievements of M. Tecla are one of the interesting records of scientific discovery in this generation."

Tecla's Pearls

—his newest and most wonderful scientific achievement—are made from genuine "nacre," the sole ingredient of natural pearls, therefore possessing the identical qualities of the pearls from the oyster.

NEW YORK HERALD, October 28, 1906:—
"Tecla manufactures with the aid of science in a chemist's laboratory what nature is a sluggard in producing."

Exquisite Necklaces of Tecla Pearls

Ranging in price from $10.00 to $300.00

We show clasps in either plain platinum and gold or set with genuine diamonds (which we furnish at actual importation cost) in innumerable unique and individual designs direct from our Paris headquarters.

THE BROOKLYN EAGLE, Nov. 11, 1906:—
"For a long time he manufactured his rubies in secret, keeping his process hidden from the knowledge of the world."

NEW YORK TIMES, October 21, 1906:—
"The achievement of that amazing man Tecla is of the greatest importance."

THEATRE MAGAZINE, Nov. 10, 1906:—
"M. Tecla's pearls are a calcareous concretion scientifically produced with all the hardness and exact weight of the real article."

NEW YORK SUN March 25, 1906:—
"Through a secret known only to himself, M. Tecla has succeeded in attaining his ambition to produce what is apparently a genuine pearl."

NEW YORK HERALD, October 28, 1906:—
"Tecla scientifically constructed pearls are equal to the rarest gems of the Orient."

NEW YORK HERALD, Nov. 5, 1906:—
"It is said that although they are artificial, they are the same in composition as the natural stones."

NEW YORK MAIL AND EXPRESS, Nov. 6, 1906:—
"The artificial stone that would stand every test of the experts came to this country in the modest guise of the reconstructed ruby."

THE WORLD, Nov. 5, 1906:—
"According to importers, the public and very few retail jewelers can tell a reconstructed ruby from a natural stone."

NEW YORK HERALD, October 28, 1906:—
"M. Tecla, the wonderful French alchemist has startled the scientific world and revolutionized the jewel marts of civilized countries."

NEW YORK TIMES, October 21, 1906:—
"A natural pearl costing $2,000 could be replaced by a Tecla pearl for $100. One couldn't tell them apart, yet one would have never seen an oyster, while the other called some bivalve home."

NEW YORK HERALD, October 28, 1906:—
"In the Tecla pearls, rubies, sapphires and emeralds one learns what wonders science has wrought in the production of these gems, which in every respect are equal to nature's product."

NEW YORK MAIL AND EXPRESS, November 6, 1906:—
"If the old man had kept his secret to himself a new 'Monte Cristo' could have been written. But law and custom in France require chemists and jewelers to use truthful labels."

NEW YORK TIMES, October 21 1906:—
"Tecla, who, after more than a decade of incessant labor and repeated experiment, has succeeded in producing an indestructible pearl that in nearly every essential is equal to that produced by nature."

SUGGESTIONS FOR ENGLISH BOOTH IN BAZAAR OF NATIONS

PLease give original ideas for the booth representing England, in a Bazaar of Nations. What articles to sell, etc.

Ans.—Draping the booths with flags, wearing the costume of Britannia, etc., has been done so much that we advise having the English booth devoted to the sale of English china exclusively. There are so many kinds of inexpensive English ware, which are most useful. Decorate the booth to represent Wedgewood, using lining or denim, in Wedgewood blue or gray, and appliqué on it figures in white, heavy paper, or cotton cloth. Tea pots, cups and saucers, bread and butter plates, small flower pots, ramikins, and toast racks are only a few of the many pretty, useful and inexpensive things you can have for sale. You could also sell Lipton's tea, tea caddies, Perry prints of the English cathedrals, etc. If you wish those in charge of the booth to wear fancy costumes, have them wear Wedgewood blue, trimmed with white, or the all-white Grecian costume as pictured on Wedgewoods.

This idea is original, and we think if you carry it out that it will be most successful. [5280]

Inquiries may be made in regard to wall papers, rugs, carpets, hangings, furniture, etc. A charge of 50 cents is made by Vogue for each room described and 10 cents additional for each sample sent when samples are requested. INQUIRIES IN REGARD TO OLD FURNITURE

WHo are the best English authorities on eighteenth century furniture (Chippendale, Heppelwhite, etc.), and who are their publishers?

2. Is there a magazine devoted, or largely devoted, to old furniture; if so, its name, and where published?

3. Where can one get a practical idea of the current value of old furniture?

4. Are four-post mahogany beds rare; what is the value in America; of whom can they be purchased?

5. What pieces of old furniture are in most demand in America?

6. Is Til wood furniture rare, and valuable?

7. Can one buy an old George II spinet in America? If so, at about what price, and of whom?

8. What is the value of Chippendale chairs?

Ans.—1. Singleton, French and English Furniture (McClure, Phillips & Co.). K. W. Clouston, The Chippendale Period in English Furniture (London, 1897). John A. Heaton, Furniture and Decoration in England During the Eighteenth Century (2 vols. London, 1890)

2. The Connoisseur (London).

3. From records of sales at Christie's, and the Hôtel Drouet, Paris, noted monthly in the books and journals mentioned.

4. They are not much in demand at the present time; and are, therefore, comparatively rare in the antique shops. An advertisement, however, would undoubtedly elicit numerous offers from private individuals. The price depends entirely upon the elaborateness of the carving. I have seen a good one offered for $75.00.

5. Chippendale, especially chairs; Heppelwhite and Sheraton sideboards, and anything of the Louis Seize style.

6. Although uncommon, it is not particularly prized just now.

7. The most fashionable spinets in the reign of George II were made by the London firm of Hitchcock. Examples of these are to be found in several private collections, and rarely come into the open market. It is impossible to quote price, as this always depends on the eagerness of the buyer, and the length of his purse.

8. A genuine Chippendale chair will bring a very high pirce. At public auction during the present year, specimens have brought sums varying from $125.00 to $1,000.00. Good examples of the Chippendale period, however, may be bought in New York for $50.00 up.

DRESS

[NOTE.—All questions under this heading will receive prompt attention. Inquiries may be made in regard to models and materials, costumes suitable for various occasions, liveries for servants, etc. Please note fees and rules under Answers to Correspondents.]

SUGGESTION FOR SPRING GOWN

WHat material do you suggest for a light-weight silk gown?

Ans.—Buy a crêpe de chine or marquisette for your gown, instead of a regulation silk. Crêpe de chine is much worn this year, and marquisette is the new silk veiling very soft and graceful, and suitable for the most elaborate gown. If you do not care for these, however, get a chiffon taffeta or a soft faille silk. [5277]

EARRINGS

Do you advise having the ears pierced for valuable pearl earrings? Is it safe to wear them in any other way?

Ans.—Very few women nowadays have their ears pierced, and the most valuable pearls are worn with screw fastenings. If these are tightly adjusted, there is little danger of losing them. We think it is a safe method, and certainly prefer it to having the ears pierced. [5281]

WARDROBE SUGGESTIONS FOR SOUTHERN TRIP TO D. L. C.

1.—I have a handsome black and white silk suit with Eton coat. Should the jacket sleeves be short or long?

2.—Would white serge be advisable for a plain tailor-made jacket and skirt?

3.—Do you advise elbow-length sleeves or long sleeves in waists and gowns?

4.—Are black or white pumps preferable for seven-year-old children to wear to dancing class with white stockings?

Ans.—1.—Have the sleeves of your silk Eton suit made three-quarter length and wear with it sixteen button length gloves.

2.—White serge is an excellent material for a tailor-made suit. Henrietta cloth is also pretty and smart, but serge wears best.

3.—Have the sleeves of fancy waists, organdies and all elaborate high neck gowns made elbow length. Plain shirtwaists with plaited ruffles (such as are shown on p. 646, Vogue, 8 November) are much worn now, also severe tailor-made skirts, and for these long sleeves are better style. We also advise long sleeves or almost long, stopping just short of the wrist for plain tailor-made coats—for your white serge, for instance.

4.—Black patent leather pumps are the best style for a seven-year-old boy, for dancing class, worn with black stockings. Girls usually wear white stockings and white dancing pumps or slippers and stockings may match the gown or the ribbons worn with a white gown.

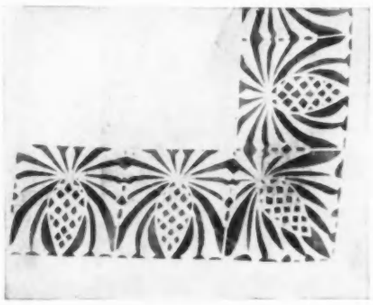
AMATEUR STENCILLING

BY MABEL TUKE PRIESTMAN

Most American women are interested in making the home individual, by unique, decorative touches and one method of bringing about this result is the use of the stencil, for ornamenting curtains, portieres, table-covers, pillows, etc.

Curtains made of scrim, bobinet, white swiss, or even cheese cloth look exceedingly pretty against the glass, when ornamented with a good stencilled design and artistic effect is obtained by a very small outlay. Inner curtains can be made of Russian crash, poplin cloth, denim, art ticking or arras cloth, all of which are inexpensive, and yet when stencilled any of them gives a room an attractive appearance.

Burlap, in its natural color, can be used for portieres, but the very best quality should be chosen as the cheapest grades are apt to shed dust. The arras cloth and crash are also suitable materials for portieres, but these should be chosen in pale shades as stencil work is not as effective on dark materials. Lattice cloth is another material which is very pretty for table-covers, or for inner curtains. It comes in all colors, but pale brown and pale green and ecru are the most suitable shades for curtains. For table-covers the dark greens and browns are the most suitable. It is an open material as its name suggests.



A GOOD DESIGN FOR A TABLE COVER

In a simply furnished room, where undyed burlap does not seem out of place, pillows can be made out of hand-woven floor cloths. These cost from ten cents to eighteen cents, according to the size, and when stenciled, make a very craftsman's like pillow, providing the design is good. A simple design is essential, as dainty flowers are not appropriate on so coarse a material.

When stenciling, the design can be run down the side and bottom, but sometimes a sash curtain is very pleasing when a small design is run above the hem line, at the bottom and again across the curtain below the hem line at the top. The flower pot design stencilled five or three times across the curtain according to the width, introduces spots of color, that often adds the right note, to a room.

The conventionalized poppy could be used in a sitting room or bed-room and could be done in two shades of green or two shades of red, or could have only one shade of red and one shade of green.

A rose design is pretty for a bed-room, and would look well as a border on white swiss curtains if the walls are covered with a pretty rose paper. The same design could be used around a bed-spread of white linen, or white swiss, and could also be used for ornamenting a chair seat of linen, taffeta or denim. Pale green would be appropriate for chair seats, in such a room.

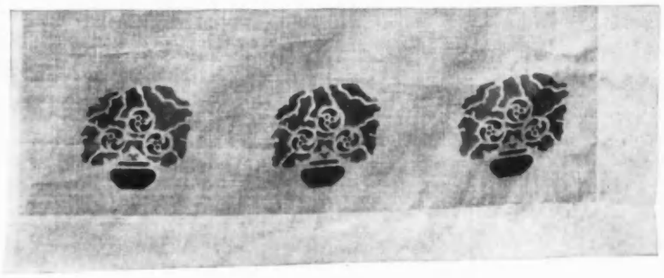
The design for a table-cover could be done on arras cloth, or on any of the coarse towelings, which are so much used for all kinds of decorative work.

Having obtained a good stencil the next thing to learn is, how to apply the stencil. First of all, the material to be decorated must be hemmed, or at least basted. Then put it firmly on an old table or board, which is first covered with unbleached muslin and strips of white blotting paper. Thumb tacks must be used to keep the material tightly stretched, ready for the stencil. Then lay your stencil about two inches above the hem line and hold it in place with the thumb tacks.

Ordinary oil colors, in tubes, diluted with turpentine or benzine can be used, for stencilling but if one intends to do a good deal of this work, it is better to go to a reliable paint shop and have the paints especially mixed directing the man to use Japan dryer in place of linseed oil.

Several brushes will be required, one for each color. It is not absolutely necessary to buy a palette, as old saucers can be conveniently used, as brushes can be worked on the edge of the saucer to remove all superfluous color.

FOR A TABLE COVER OR THE HEM OF A CURTAIN



FLOWER POT DESIGN FOR A BUREAU SCARF

The secret of good stenciling is to always remember, that you are stencilling the material, not painting it. Therefore, have a dry brush, containing very little color and rub it in hard. If the shade is not dark enough the work can be gone over a second time, before the stencil is removed.

ON HER DRESSING TABLE

[NOTE.—Readers of Vogue inquiring for names of shops where dressing-table articles are purchasable should inclose a stamped and addressed envelope for reply, and state page and date.]

A Preparation of special importance is a freckle paste represented as a successful remover of these little blemishes. The price, $1.50, includes a cake of soap, which is considered a necessary adjunct.

Not every complexion will be benefitted by the use of a complexion brush. The owner of a firm, fine-grained skin, that has never known the blemish of enlarged pores, even in the region of the nose, would better let well enough alone, and secure cleanliness with warm water, pure soap, and the milder friction of a raw silk face cloth. For a neglected skin, however, the complexion brush is a radical renovator, which if used regularly and discreetly will work wonders. Some skins are slow to show improvement, and the utmost perseverance is necessary to train them properly, so when once begun, careful night toilets should never be shirked or omitted, as every time this occurs the good already accomplished is partly undone. A medium-sized brush, softer than the ordinary bath brush, should be chosen, and with a greater power of friction than one of softest camel's hair. Night is the best time for use, and if the water be too hard, it can be softened with benzoin. One of the best face brushes I have ever seen sells for $1.50, and is of such excellent make that it should last for years. Following the bath with the complexion brush, if one be earnest in the campaign of self-beautifying, the skin should be massaged with a cream or lotion adjusted to its peculiar condition. A massage cream perfumed with violet is among the best of those of moderate price, and as far as I can ascertain does not contain a particle of grease. It works into the skin with great ease, leaving the latter much refreshed, soft to the touch, and perfectly clean. Not only has it these qualities, but as a skin food it finds its greatest claim for praise, since it builds up wasted tissue, fills out hollows and aids in obliterating lines and wrinkles. Price, 50 cents a jar.

Should the condition be very serious, a more strenuous method should be adopted, and I seriously advise a French massage cream which has gained the confidence of its compatriots, and already established a name for itself in this country. One of the new mechanical means of massage may be necessary to gain desired results, the apparatus for these treatments varying from $15.00 for water power massage, to $5.00 for a nice little arrangement which accomplishes much in the simplest way. Circulation must be aroused when impaired, and either of these methods has this end in view.

Experimentary preparations of orange flower water and rose extracts are made in the South even by little children, for the quantities of blossoms always within reach offer temptation to attempt the preservation of their delicious odor in some lasting form. Few good extracts of the former variety seem to have found their way north, but I have discovered at least one in which the true odor has been wonderfully preserved. This orange flower extract is very decided in character, though delicate, and sells for 63 cents a bottle.

Should one desire wavy locks without resorting to any heating apparatus, I recommend a little device which seems delightfully simple and has a very similar effect to that of Marcel waving. It is light in weight, though of metal with a patented fastening to prevent slipping. Strand after strand of hair is caught fast into deep ondulations in these little steel devices, making a large, natural wave without any of the burnt, fuzzy appearance apt to appear in time, where hot irons are used. After a shampoo the hair is very susceptible to such means of waving, and if the curlers are slipped in while it is still damp, and allowed to remain till the hair is dry, deep, decided waves will be the result, and these should not loosen for at least two days under ordinary conditions. Even when the hair is already dressed it is easy to slip the wavers into place, so no one need have the bother of taking it down should an extra wave seem desirable. Price, $1.00 a dozen, or 25 cents for a sample box of three.

CONCERNING ANIMALS

[NOTE.—Communications concerning animals or birds, and all phases of their protection, should be especially addressed to Mrs. Josephine Redding, into whose care this column has been committed.]

BIRD SLAUGHTER BY ITALIANS

ANother count against the Italian immigrant is, at the moment a subject of paramount importance among those of humane societies and individuals who make the protection of birds their especial care. Among his other detestable practices is that of inveterate shooting of birds, and having rid his native land of the least harmful of God's creatures, he is attempting to bring about the same deplorable conditions here, even going to the extent of seeking to murder by bullets and stilletto thrusts officials who attempt to interfere with his murderous pastime. The slaughter of birds in Italy (according to the ornithological authority Francis H. Herrick, who has recently returned from an investigation of the bird situation in that land) is prodigious. Twice a year, autumn and spring, the great army of migratory birds that fly over Italy are slaughtered without discrimination and exposed for sale in heaps, in the small markets of the Italian cities, where they are regarded as toothsome bits in the native grill houses. The result of this wholesale murder is that Italy has become a land without birds, and to this melancholy estate hordes of Italians are endeavoring to bring this country, thus returning base ingratitude to this nation, which offers them such opportunity for advancement as can be had neither in their own country nor in any other of the whole world.

MISS CLEMENS'S APPEAL

Jean Clemens, daughter of Mark Twain, recently made a strong appeal to the local Audubon Society to stop the slaughter that is being carried on by gangs of Italian laborers near Katonah, where there are 500 employed in construction work, the pop of whose guns can be heard every day. Miss Clemens points out that if stern repressive measures are not taken now, the ranks of birds flying north next spring will be greatly depleted by these and other ruthless Italians. In Miss Clemens's opinion in this instance, Mr. Winslow, the contractor could bring pressure on his employees that would be more efficacious than the primitive work by the Audubon Society among the men. It is worthy of note that while making an attempt recently to arrest an Italian pot hunter caught in the act of shooting in Rockland county, an officer of the Audubon Society and an aid had the culprit first blaze his gun at them—it fortunately missed fire, and then draw his stiletto and attempt to plunge it into their backs.

BIRD PROTECTION LEGISLATION

In his first published annual report Mr. Dutcher, president of the local Audubon Society, said in effect that the thousands of Italians who are employed all over the country have come to be recognized as so grave a menace to bird life that in several states special laws have been enacted with the object of controlling foreign hunters. For this State Mr. Dutcher recommends the passage of a law making every alien who desires to hunt, procure a license, giving him such a privilege for which he must pay $25.00. The license should not be made in force longer than 31 December of the year of issue, and it must be carried on the person of the hunter, whenever he carries a gun in public. Should he violate the game law by shooting in the closed season, or by killing any bird or animal for which there is no open season, his license should be forfeited, his gun confiscated and he should also be liable for the penalties provided in the game law for violation by a citizen. Should an alien resist arrest or attempt to murder a game warden, imprisonment should be added to the other penalties. Mr. Dutcher also advocates the preparation and distribution of warning notices printed in foreign languages. It is stated that if such a law can be passed in those portions of the whole country that are now overrun by these alien hunters, this menace to our small birds and game would be removed.

ITALIANS CRUEL TO ANIMALS AND BIRDS

Professor Herrick says truly that the Italians appear to possess two rather contradictory traits, "marked kindness to children and cruelty towards animals." There is nothing puzzling about this to the student of church history, for the whole Christian theology is founded upon the theory of superiority of mankind, and in some of the churches it is specifically taught that man is under no obligation to be merciful to birds and beasts. The Italians are not a pagan people, be it remembered. The Christian church has existed for centuries in Italy and the Italians are aggressively Christian.

Sidney H. Beard in an article in The Herald of the Golden Age in predicting a time when wrongs will be no longer heaped upon the sentients of the animal world, says that indignant repudiation will overtake the very terrible teaching of the Roman Catholic Church (as expressed in the Catholic Dictionary) that the brutes are made for man, who has the same right over them that he has over plants. That he may, according to the express permission of God given to Noe, kill them for his food, and this without strict necessity, and that it must be lawful also to put them to death or to inflict pain upon them, for any good or reasonable end, even for purposes of recreation."

Has this classifying of sentient creatures who are as capable as ourselves of feeling acute physical suffering with stones and plants anything in common with the suggestion of tender oversight that Christ gives in his averment that not a sparrow falls to the ground unheeded by the Great Father? Is it any wonder that a nation like Italy, made up largely of low-grade peasants under such church teaching in regard to God's dumb creatures, should develop into cruel men and women who torture animals?

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ATTEMPTS TO STOP THE SKINNING ALIVE OF SEALS

That tried and true friend of our humbler kin, G. Foster Howell, has sent to this department an extract from the American Shipbuilder, in which a little known subject is commented upon. President's messages are usually such appallingly long documents that few men and still fewer women read them throughout, so that the subjects treated in them, if they do not range high in public interest, are apt to be overlooked. It is one of these little considered subjects that Mr. Howell emphasizes. The President in his annual message brought up the horrors of the seal butchery on the Alaskan coasts, and gave a warning in no uncertain tone that it must be stopped even if force of arms has to be resorted to. The Japanese sealing vessels have frequented these waters in large numbers, and the slaughter of seals has been accomplished in the most inhuman and barbaric manner. The President points out that nearly all the seals killed were females and that the work is done with frightful barbarity.

Many of the seals appear to have been skinned alive and many were found half skinned and still alive. The raids were repelled only by the use of firearms, and five of the raiders were killed, two were wounded and twelve captured, including the two wounded. Those captured have since been tried and sentenced to imprisonment. The Government of Japan has been communicated with and assurances received that it will do its share in breaking up or preventing a recurrence of these outrages. The United States will increase its revenue cutter patrol and a man-of-war be sent up there next season, and if it is found that the hideous practices cannot be stopped by the united efforts of other governments, then the President suggests that a plan be devised to exterminate the entire seal herd ourselves in the most humane way possible. All honor to President Roosevelt for using the influence of his exalted office in behalf of the helpless seal.

[NOTE.—Those who are already interested in the department "Concerning Animals" can aid very materially in adding to the interest of it and extending its influence by sending for publication the photographs of their animal and bird pets. The pictorial presentation of any subject wins for it attention even from those not especially interested in the topic treated, and this is one way of adding to the effect of whatever is presented. It is not alone for embellishment that these photographs are requested, but for the sake also of arresting the attention of the indifferent. The presentment of pictures of any horse, dogs or cats, is not enough for our purpose. It is desired that the bird or animal or reptile or fish shall be a pet. Accompanying the photograph it is asked that there shall be a simply written statement of facts in regard to breed of the animal, together with any information as to habits, tricks or characteristics that owners may care to write out.]

QUICK PRINT SECTION

The "Quick-Print section," page 75—s should have a word or two of explanation. The reader doubtless has noticed that two kinds of paper are used on Vogue. One is very smooth so as to take a clear impression from fine engravings and bring out all the tonic values of any drawing. Paper of this description cannot be printed quickly. The other kind of paper is softer and not so smooth. It is specially adapted to quick printing, and delicately shaded drawings cannot be printed well on its spongy surface. On this softer paper all the late items and articles requiring none or very simply rendered drawings are printed, such forms going to press on Monday of the week of publication. On the smoother surfaced, highly finished paper are put those illustrations which require very careful printing, such forms going to press nearly two weeks before the day of publication. By this arrangement the reader gets the very great advantage of having not only an illustrated paper containing drawings printed as are monthly magazines, but articles containing information brought to a new basis as close as only three days before the day of publication.

THE SALE AND EXCHANGE

UNder the general title of "The Sale and Exchange," readers of Vogue have a department by means of which they can sell or exchange their belongings, such as books, household articles, music or musical instruments, jewelry, curios, old silver, porcelain, bric-a-brac, gowns, kodaks, etc. Women going into mourning and possessing valuable and extensive wardrobes may find this department of inestimable value to them.

Advertisers of clothing should be careful to state size.

Collectors, whether of rare editions, stamps, autographs, old silver or brass, or of curios, may find here a valuable medium of exchange for duplicates or the acquisition of fresh specimens.

CHARGES FOR NUMBERED ADVERTISEMENTS: Three cents a word for one insertion. Two cents a word for each insertion if ordered for four or more weeks consecutively.

Payment by check, stamps or postal money order.

RULES: Advertisements must be received not later than the first mail on Friday in order to appear the following Thursday.

"The Sale and Exchange" being for the use of private persons only, the advertisements of dealers will not be accepted.

METHOD OF REPLYING TO NUMBERED ADVERTISEMENTS: Enclose your reply in a blank envelope, close it, place the number of the advertisement and its date of issue in the upper right-hand corner, thus:

234
1 January, '07

Then put this reply AND A LOOSE TWO-CENT POSTAGE STAMP FOR EACH REPLY into another envelope which seal and mail to The S. & X., Vogue, 11 East 24th Street, New York.

No replies with stamps fixed on the envelope, or with stamped envelopes or with postal cards will be forwarded, and the right is reserved to open or to decline to forward any reply.

When there is no response, it must be assumed that the offer is not acceptable or that the article is already disposed of.

DESCRIPTIONS OF FASHIONS

LEFT FIGURE.—Afternoon frock of pastel pink linen, with waistcoat effect, sleeves and collar of selftone French batiste embroidered in white; the inset tucked yoke is of white net. The fronts of the linen bodice are slashed in strap ends that are hand-embroidered in eyelet and convent work combined, the straps on skirt front corresponding.

MIDDLE FIGURE.—Pale lavender French batiste frock, with vest front and deep cuffs of cream net hand embroidered in cream and violet. Narrow velvet ribbons lattice over vest and cuffs, caught by lace-covered buttons, from which tassels fall. The girdle is of amber messaline satin.

Dinner Gown of Irish crochet lace combined with chenille-dotted white net; the bolero effect is of brocaded silver cloth, and the lace sleeves are tied in by brocaded silver gauze ribbons. Corded pipings of silver gauze edge neck, sleeve caps and front panel; the bodice and full sleeve caps are made of the chenille-dotted net.

MIDDLE LEFT.—Mushroom turban of white Milan, the crown completely encircled by a white swan's breast, the left end drooping over the brim at back. There is a self-formed bandeau on which a black velvet twist is placed, resting partially on hair; a loop bow at back.

UPPER RIGHT.—White Milan walking hat, with upcurved left brim, showing quilled white maline on the black velvet bandeau. White wings held by a loop of white maline in folds.

LEFT FIGURE.—Long coat of heavy white pongee silk, in empire effect, with vestees and lower front borders of Clones lace, edged by stitched bands of the silk. The upper part of coat has a box back, that laps over the lower part in tuck effect, curving up towards sides where the two straps that trim fronts end in points caught by white pearl buttons.

MIDDLE FIGURE.—White linen crash motor coat, with under cuffs hand embroidered in Swedish cut-work design. The fronts of coat are double breasted below the revers with which the small, mannish collar ends; and the edges are lapped and stitched over the yoke, which is in ray tucks.

LEFT FIGURE.—Beige broadcloth coat, with collar, cuffs and side lacings of bottle green moiré chiffon velvet. Green silk tassels finish the ends. The side seams open over a narrow panel of the velvet, that ends where the lacings begin.

MIDDLE FIGURE.—Costume of striped gray suiting, with panel effects on skirt and coat of gray velvet trimmed with rows of gray soutache, and outlined by shaped bands. The vest fronts are of scarlet broadcloth, with crosswise rows of oxidyzed silver soutache, the edge finished by two vertical rows close together, a scarlet silk cord between them. Burnished steel buttons.

UPPER LEFT.—White silk stockings embroidered in sprays and clusters of small white flowers and leaves.

LOWER LEFT.—White silk stockings embroidered with three long clusters of white foliage and berries.

UPPER MIDDLE.—White silk stocking embroidered between clusters of clocked lines.

LOWER MIDDLE.—White silk stockings embroidered in vines of white flowers.

LEFT FIGURE.—Gown of white crêpe meteor, with jacket of cloth-of-silver edged in cordings of chiffon over silver cloth. Yoke and sleeves of fancy net lace embroidered in chiffon flowers, lined in cloth-of-silver. Cordings of chiffon run to knee depth, graduating toward the back, and end in silver roses with tasseled ends.

MIDDLE FIGURE.—Gown of maize satin, with front panel and bretelles of Venetian lace. Black velvet ribbons caught with jetbuttons from waist and sleeves and cross section over-panel.

RIGHT FIGURE.—Cinder-gray chiffon cloth over gray satin. Frock is embroidered in green and mauve grapes with leaves of inset metallic cloth, shaded. The embroidery is outlined in opalescent beads and bugles. Trimming of Tokio lace and bands of dark green velvet ribbon.

THE COVER

THe decoration on the cover of this number is a reproduction of an oblong linen and lace tablecloth, made for a lace exhibition at Paris. The solid inset border is of point de Venise lace, showing various trades, alternating with the Bavarian coat-of-arms. Beyond this is a narrow width of linen, finished by an edge of lace. Reproduced by courtesy of Gebrüder Mosse. Cost, $1800.

The Season of Sales

New York is the PLACE and NOW is the time to buy.

January and February are the bargain months of the year. All the reliable shops are advertising sales of a third to a half reduction on holiday prices. Remarkable values in white goods, gowns, lingerie, cut glass, household furnishings, etc., etc.

If you cannot come to New York let me be your factor. I know where and how to buy. I limit the number of my clients, thus insuring individual attention to each. I buy with care and discrimination, as though I were purchasing for myself. Special attention to style, quality and price.

Write and let me know what you want and I will tell you what I can do. Goods sent on approval when satisfactory references are furnished.

Send for booklet.

WHY NOT WRITE TO ME TO-DAY?

The query is not asked in wholly unselfish spirit. I have something to gain from correspondence with you. But I also have certain advantages to offer you that make it well worth your while to write to me. For instance, there's the matter of

Beautiful Furs at Little Prices

Yes, the lowest prices you ever heard of for honest, stylish Furs. I would like to tell you about that advantage, if you will write to me. Ask for my Fur Catalogue.

Bargains in White Goods

Every large store in New York announced its semi-annual sale weeks ago. Now come the very best offers. Its cleaning up time, and dining-room and bath-room and bed-room needs, together with women's personal belongings, may be bought extremely low by one who is well informed. That's another advantage. Ask me more about it—it will pay you.

And Shopping of All Kinds

Whatever you may need, write to me about it. Most things—apparel or home needs—can be bought better in New York than anywhere else. And a woman who does nothing but buy for others can certainly buy better than anyone else. Entrust the purchasing of your needs to me. This, too, will be a positive advantage to you. I will get you only honest goods, and at lower prices than you would have to pay.

Try One More Good Dinner

Good Digestion, Good Health, Good Complexion

READ COMMON SENSE—IT CANNOT DECEIVE

You Suffer from Many Human Ills—Definite and Indefinite—Decided and Undecided—with Indigestion Always in Evidence. You find nothing which gives you Definite or Decided Relief. Why? Because, All Human Ills are caused by Indigestion, Congestion and Nervous Exhaustion. They are Conspirators in Common. You must have a cure for all at one and the same time, or There is no Decided Cure. Consequently, it is necessary for you to have a Perfect Corrective, Digestive, Tonic, Diluent, Solvent, Diuretic and Cleanser without being a Purgative. All Simple and Beneficent, like the Sunshine, does good, but can do no possible harm; Which will cure any one or all at one and the same time—SUCH AS IS FOUND ONLY IN

MAN-A-CEA WATER

The MAN-CA-NESE Natural Spring Water

Which Cures Where All Else Has Failed

It is Simple, Tasteless, Absolutely Harmless. You would not know it from any other Clear, Crystal, Delicious Water. (Like all the secrets of Divine Creation, hidden in something—Simple,—Impalpable,—Subtle,—of which ordinarily you are unconscious.) It enables you to begin at once to eat anything your palate or appetite may suggest, same as when well, without fear of Fermentation, Acidity, Gases, that Fullness, Lump, Distress after Eating, Nausea and Consequent Intestinal Troubles. It not only Re-establishes good Digestion; but it Dissolves and Eliminates from the blood the Poisonous Solids and Substances foreign to healthful conditions, and which makes a dull dead, muddy complexion.

Your own experience with Soda, Pepsin, Iron, Tonics, Stimulants, Opiates and Drugs generally, separately or in combination, which, while they may temporarily relieve in some respects, proves that they do harm in other respects, and upon the whole there is no Decided Improvement.

You can stop your suffering to-day, and shortly restore your health, and radiant color to your complexion by the use of this truly Wonderful Water.

AUCTION SALES

New York. Mendelssohn Hall. Mr. H. S. Henry's notable collection of paintings by The Men of 1830. 25 Jan., 8 P.M. On exhibition at American Art Galleries, from 19 to 25 Jan.

GOSSIP

THE first art sale of the season to be held at Mendelssohn Hall, New York, took place on the evenings of 10 and 11 January, under the auspices of the American Art Galleries. The collection consisted of paintings by modern foreign and American artists, and although the prices obtained, in many cases, were rather disappointing—about 175 pictures realized a total of $150,867.

On the first evening the highest price was $500.00 paid for Albert Bierstadt's painting of a prairie schooner and western emigrants, entitled, Halt by the River. The Gossips, by Daniel R. Knight, brought $400.00, as did also The Pet Calves, by Anton Braith. The Naturalist, by Emile Meyer, brought $345.00; The Market Place, by Alonzo Perez, $300.00; and A Nubian Musician, by Gérôme, only $225.00.

At the second session of the sale by far the best pictures were offered, among them being Harvesting the Poppies, by Jules Breton, which was bought by Senator W. A. Clark, for $40,000, the highest price of the sale. Among the other important works Moorish Sheik and Escort, by Schreyer, brought $10,000.

THE UNEMPLOYED

IT pleases the purposes of Jack London (and other sentimentalists who are so overcome by the world's misery that without proper study of causes they rush into print about the woes of mankind), to insist, among other things, that the alleged wicked capitalists cunningly arrange to have a great army of unemployed men always on tap all over the country. The purpose of this alleged fostering of a poverty leisure class is to keep labor in subjection by the threat of a great horde of wage-seekers ready to take places made vacant by strikes. The horrible cruelty of the alleged forcing of many thousand men to the ragged edge of want so that they may be an easily available club with which to continue the alleged subjugation of the laboring man, has been made the topic of much hot oratory and writing. Reading one of these diatribes against the wicked machinations of the capitalist one is lost in amazement over the docility of all these thousands of unemployed who are thus represented to a man as meekly enduring homelessness, hunger and all sorts of privations at the behest of the octopus trust.

What is known as the bread line, that group which waits about the streets in the night at certain baker-shops, or on thoroughfares (in the latter circumstance under the guidance of a religious exhorter) is pointed out as one of the tragic results of capital's effort to have at hand, ready for emergencies, an army of the unemployed.

This inaccurate analysis of the man out of a job is of a piece with much of the loose talk recklessly indulged in by sentimentalists who show a marked tendency to idealize the poor man at the expense of every other class in the community, and who have apparently no conception that their ill-considered denunciations of the employing class serves not only to darken counsel, but, what is of tragic moment, to breed all sorts of ugly devils of class hatred and discontent, emotions that, thus fostered, are liable to translate themselves into indiscriminate spoiliation of the classes by the masses. Unintelligent comment in regard to the problem of the unemployed is wholly inexcusable when such institutions as charity organization societies have available for proper investigation carefully collected data covering all phases of the subject. Besides every other philanthropy, where the records are properly kept, and where attempts are made to bring work and the man into intimate relations can throw valuable side lights on this economic waste which bears so hard on the industrious classes. No one will accuse the Society for improving the Condition of the Poor of trying to present the poor man in a discreditable light, for if this Society errs, it is rather in the direction of minimizing his faults and exaggerating his claims on the charity of his richer fellows. Some 20,000 cards were distributed to those of the unemployed needing aid most last year by the Joint Application Bureau (in which the S. I. C. P. is interested), and of those receiving the cards only 172 (less than two per cent) returned to the Society rooms to be put in the way of permanently helping themselves. Out of 44 positions found by one employment agency for men sent to it by the Society for Improving the Condition of the Poor, investigation showed that 20 did not take the places, 6 worked only a few days and only 18 were permanently placed. Even here, where the showing is better for the poor, over sixty per cent refused to take up work. Still other facts as to the unemployed can be had from large employers of labor, one of whom made public through a widely circulated New York daily journal the chronic scarcity of certain kinds of labor. The firm with which the correspondent is connected is interested in developing certain sections of this country, and the demand was for laborers who would be paid wages ranging from $1.50 to $1.75 a day. It was not necessary even to have transportation and other expenses to destination, as these were to be advanced by the employing firm and deducted subsequently from the laborer's wages. In many cases if the laborer remained at work for a certain length of time no transportation would be deducted, and in other cases still only a portion of the transportation was to be deducted. Here was certainly a chance that should have appealed to the army of the unemployed which the sentimental writers on social questions say are living in destitution. A most careful canvass for this employing agency this year failed to reveal any ablebodied men throughout the eastern part of New York State and a good part of New England, who were unemployed, and although large commissions were offered to men of experience to secure laborers they were unable to secure any. Even the regular labor employment agencies are "unable to supply anything like the demand." Such experiences constitute incontrovertible facts which the heart-to-heart writers ignore, an omission that greatly impairs the value of their work. These sentimentalists see numbers of the unemployed in the cities of the Atlantic seaboard, and of these an experienced labor employer wrote to the World: "The majority of employers prohibit employing agencies from taking able-bodied Americans, as it has been found by experience that the American in the east out of a job is not a desirable addition to their neighborhoods. There is hardly a contractor in the South who has not lost thousands of dollars through trying to utilize this labor, and there is hardly a jail in certain sections of the South which is not being constantly recruited from the stream of men from New York."

Several things have occurred recently to throw discredit on those afflicted with sentimental hysteria, who see in every unemployed man one of a great number of victims of tyrannical capital or cruel conditions. These well-intended but ill-informed persons need to realize that the poor man is not infrequently lazy, inefficient and addicted to drink, and that, if it would, capital could not keep a reserve army of the semi-starved made up of thousands of poor men. That is the wild dream of a sentimentalism that slops over.

DER SCHWERENÖTER

THE HONEY-MONTH BEGINS

BY EDITH M. BLANCHARD

Rita, the newly made "Mrs." who absolutely refused to be wept over, sat alone before the blossom-heaped fireplace. She disapproved of wedding tears, declaring they were foolish, wrong, and an omen of more to follow. Therefore, when the maids and a bevy of girl friends had pronounced her ready for the journey they were all playfully ejected and the few last moments were her own.

Music from the Hungarian orchestra drifted in the open windows with the scent of yellow honey suckle and roses which clung just outside; indistinct words and light laughter came too; but Rita was only conscious of the bright band on her third finger. She smiled and turned it caressingly—it meant so many things—a new self, a new life, but an old love. Its gleam dimmed all other things until someone knocked.

"Rita, dear! Won't you let mother in? It is time for Bob now, and—"

The new "Mrs." crossed swiftly to the door.

"Go away, you dear April shower!" she ordered with mock sternness. "You would spoil all my new clothes. Remember that I shall not allow one drop of rain, nor even a mist, at my wedding! I shall stay just here, alone, until Bob comes."

"It is time now," came the disappointed answer. "I cannot think what makes him so long."

The bride went to the window nearest the vines and roses, and leaned into the moonlight fair and pure as they. Her eyes followed the rays across the green lawn to the tree-shadowed river, to the spot where Robert Leighton had told her.

"Rita!" This time her mother's voice sounded worried. "Bob is not in his room! I do not see—I do not understand it! You have hardly time to get the train!"

"There, there, Mother!" sighed the bride. "Your clock is always fast, you know. Are you trying to make me out a deserted wife?" she laughed.

"Open the door, Rita!" called her father's voice. "You have no time to spare. Bob is with you, is he not?

"Certainly not!" the answer contained the first shade of surprise. "I am waiting for him. Does he know the time?" She heard whispers and hurrying feet as she drew on her gloves. "What a fuss they all make over me—or any other bride!" she murmured. "I shall be half-glad when we are really started, although of course—"

"Rita!" called her mother loudly, "He is not in this house! we have searched it from garret to cellar and—"

"Open the door, daughter!" interrupted her father. "We must investigate—"

"My poor, poor girl! Something must have happened!" sobbed Mrs. Lowe. "Let us in, Rita—do not be so childish! I cannot sympathize with you t-through the w-wall!"

"Why should you try!" flashed Rita. "'Sympathize' because Bob is a minute late! Please go downstairs and stay. This door will not open under any circumstances until Bob comes."

"Oh, Rita! Somehow I feel that he never will! 'Change the name and not the letter—"

"Mother!" the exclamation was so full of real amazement that it was silencing.

"But what shall we say to the guests?" inquired Mr. Lowe, dryly.

"Nothing!" ordered his daughter. "Let them think we have stolen away from an expected rain of rice and old shoes!" She listened to the retreating footsteps with a perplexed frown. It was not like Bob to be a moment late; and to-night, especially—his non-appearance was unaccountable. She waited uneasily; then nervously, and her lips set hard—for her little jeweled watch told her that the train was due so soon that it would be next to impossible to catch it. Before her mind's eye flitted faithless husbands and abandoned brides; and as the watch ticked on and on until she knew the train had left, she grew angry, frightened and deeply hurt. As she struggled fiercely, but successfully against the tabooed tears, a faint whistle reached her. Breathlessly she fluttered to the window and again leaned into the moonlight over a white, indignant face.

"Rita!" gasped her little maid of honor, "It is those Kent boys! They have abducted Bob in their automobile. I have told your mother. I cannot see how they did it, but—"

"Are—are you sure, Pauline?" Rita gasped back.

"Yes, indeed! Mandy was out on the Lexing road with her chocolate drop," explained Pauline, referring to a very brown and very attentive follower of her maid's. "The automobile passed her; she saw Bob plainly; and he was—was objecting—was going against his will." If Mandy had been quoted exactly, Pauline would have said that "two of the Kents an' Massa Bob was scrappin' something scandalous!"

"Thank heaven it is nothing—worse!" cried Rita, her nervous tension relaxing. "I imagined all sorts of—why, I might have known that—Oh, Pauline! I am so angry at those Kents that I—I— Oh, I cannot talk! If I do I shall certainly cry—and I just will not do that!"

"Angry!" burst out the sympathetic little maid of honor. "Why, I am just wild myself! I think these miserable wedding jokes are always in poor taste! But you have missed your train and your trip will be all mixed up, and I call this one anything but funny—I call it rotten!" she cried impetuously, borrowing a forbidden but expressive word from her small brother's vocabulary.

"So do I!" agreed Rita. "But I am not going to cry—I will not!"

"No, do not. Save all your strength until the Kents get back—when I hope you will crush them properly.

"I shall—into the finest powder," retorted Rita, mirthlessly. "Good-night, dear, and thank you so much for telling me!"

Alone again, there was nothing to do but wait, and the new Mrs. went mechanically to the couch, but her eyes were open, her ears strained, sleep or rest was impossible. Her sharpened hearing told her that the last guest had gone. She heard her mother tiptoe to the door and pause; then the stairs creaked faintly as she went down. Rita was thankful. Not for worlds would she have allowed petting, patting sympathy. The clock struck one and the house grew quiet. She thought of her resolution to begin her new life dry-eyed, and smiled sadly. Could she ever cry again? Her head throbbed, her nerves danced; her eyes grew dryer and dryer. The clock struck two—and ages afterward, three.

In the meantime, Tom Kent's automobile carried a furious man. Lured to a small side door when on his way to dress for the journey Robert Leighton had been seized bodily and carried to the car. Annoyed, but having a penchant for jokes himself, at first he had laughed.

"Only fifteen minutes to spare, boys!" he reminded them. "Even then I shall have to make quick time to dress and reach the station."

"You will take no train this evening!" called Tom Kent over his shoulder, as he threw on more speed. "You shall spend the night with us—at Merriment Hall!" he added, referring to a well-known resort twenty miles away.

"Like fun I shall!" retorted the bridegroom; but amid joke and jest the car went on—past residences, cottages, factories and fields.

"See here, fellows!" called Leighton finally, watch in hand, "you have had five minutes over your time. Hike for home now, and I will forgive you everything!"

Tom Kent, driving, winked at his nearest brother and let the machine shoot along into the open, moonlit country.

"See here!" shouted Leighton, impatiently. "This ceases to be a joke! I can hardly get my train! Stop, you idiot, or I'll—"

He did not finish his threat but sprang forward at Tom. The other Kents overpowered him immediately and pushed him back.

"You will pay for this, everyone of you!" he panted, breathless and white, with his temper completely gone.

"You had better stop her, Tom," whispered one of the boys. "He is all in—we have got him going—and we do not want to be too mean, you know."

The car was flying forward with a velocity that was unpleasant and increasing.

"Something is wrong," confessed Tom, over his shoulder. "I have been trying to ease her for the last ten minutes!"

"Here—let me!" cried his brother Sam, leaning over. "Great Scott, boys! it does not—it will not—she is running away!"

Their fingers sought lever after lever, and lever after lever failed to respond. The wind whipped their white faces and the momentum of the car made it rock crazily on turns. Mile after mile of macadam was left behind.

"It is no use!" shouted Tom, at last, hoarsely. "We cannot stop! We are almost to the Arton sand yards—shall I run her out of the road boys,—and take the risk?"

"Yes, yes!" shouted his brothers, nervously.

SEE STORY—THE HONEY MONTH BEGINS

SEEN ON THE STAGE

THE MAN OF THE HOUR

More than one friendly and well qualified foreign observer of our customs, problems and institutions, has expressed amazement and apprehension over our curious practice of making jokes on the lapses of public officials. These friendly foreigners would be simply aghast were they to see how audiences receive Harrigan's cynical and brutal utterances, the coarse expression of convictions that are subversive of all the community morality which the race has been taught by moral leaders to regard as ideal. In the old-fashioned melodrama the villain is hissed from the first act clear through until the last; but the villain in The Man of the Hour, even when he reveals himself as a thief, and the deliberate subverter of the morals of the community—a twentieth-century Mephistopheles lying in wait to trap souls—provokes laughter not hisses. It would be a mistake to assume, however, that this daring presentation of the politics of the large American city, fails to convey a much needed lesson to the many hundreds of men and women who have already seen it. For one thing, the very brutality of the presentation, brings forcibly home to a population whose attention is largely absorbed in bread-and-butter getting, not alone the moral obliquity of municipal politics, but the deplorable economic results that are the final outcome to the community of such abominable traffic in honor, such ghastly betrayal of public trust. Most men read only partisan journals in which it is part of the editor's stock in trade to allege most dreadful things of the opposition officials, and these the reader comes to discount, but The Man of the Hour is a non-partisan showing of municipal corruption, which is both informing and convincing. It shows in concrete form the results of partisanship as applied to municipal politics, and even the unobservant man in the street cannot fail to realize that the boss is both odious in himself and a menace to free institutions. The management of the Savoy Theatre displayed discernment in securing actors who physically, as well as in comprehension, set forth the personalities of notorious types of the boss—Frank McVicars and George Fawcett—and by so much is the iniquitous condition of municipal affairs made more apparent to even the least reflective persons. This is offered as an appreciation of the signal aid to the cause of municipal betterment that George Broadhurst, the author, and the managers, William A. Brady and James R. Grismer, have given by teaching the citizens whose home city has become a byword for corruptness and inefficiency in its public affairs, a lesson in municipal honesty.

GOSSIP

The Road to Yesterday, a comedy-phantasy by Beulah M. Dix and Evelyn G. Sutherland, brought out at the Herald Square Theatre, achieved at once a deserved popularity. The play is original in treatment, with effective incidents and coherent and entertaining story. The heroine is an American girl, Elizabeth Tyrell, who having spent a long and exciting day in sight-seeing in London, falls asleep upon her return to her temporary home, and dreams of the legends she has heard recounted. The second and third acts show the girl acting out her dream in which she is at first a drudge of three hundred years previous to the date of her falling asleep. In that far-off time she later becomes the central figure in a series of highly melodramatic proceedings, but, although she realizes she is dreaming, she cannot awake, but finds herself compelled to go on with the make-believe. Finally, she does awake and all ends well, even to the conventional potential bridegroom. It is quite impossible to convey, in a mere outline such as this, any but the slightest idea of the charm or interest of this ingenious and entertaining play. Minnie Dupree, who is remembered most delightfully by the public as the daughter in The Music Master, plays the role of the girl who dreams, and she shows so much intelligence and charm, that she established herself as a favorite in the role from the very first night. Other members of the cast are obliged to assume dual roles, that is, to take part in the dream goings on, as well as act in that portion of the play which takes place outside of the dream, and most of them are excellent. Helen Ware and Wright Kramer do some exceptionally fine work; in fact, the play is cast with great discrimination as to the especial ability of the players.

Brewster's Millions, which is another of the plays made from novels, does very well in its stage form at the New Amsterdam Theatre, where Edward Abeles, in the role of Monty Brewsters, goes through manifold exciting experiences. The whole plot is farcial in the extreme, as everyone knows who has read the novel, and the stage version has lost none of the impossible elements of the story in its original form. Unless one has made the effort to spend one million dollars in a year, it is hard to realize how difficult such an undertaking can be made by a story writer bent upon furnishing the public with a most diverting piece. The amusing incidents follow each other in quick succession, and as the company is mostly made up of young players who enter into their parts with zest, the representation is genuinely diverting to an unusual degree. Mr. Abeles, who plays the leading role, tempers his fun-making with discretion, and gives an excellent rendering of the part. The leading actress—Mary Ryan—ably seconds Mr. Abeles's efforts to make Brewster's Millions a well played farce. The most talked about scenic effect in the production is the storm at sea, which is uncommonly realistic. It does not affect the progress of the play in the least, but as a spectacle it is interesting, and it so pleases audiences that they vigorously applaud it.

Caught in the Rain, now at the Garrick Theatre, serves as a vehicle to show forth William Collier's peculiar abilities as an actor. It is the joint work of himself and Grant Stewart, and is of much the same character as the other plays, such as On the Quiet, which have been made to fit Mr. Collier's powers. This play also has a touch of ultra-realism in stage mechanics—very wet rain, at the end of the second act, which gives it its name. Nanette Comstock makes an engaging sweetheart for Mr. Collier, whose love making is never of the ardent type, and the other players in the company do good work. As Mr. Collier is a New York favorite, it seems likely that this unpretentious light comedy will have a prosperous season here.

Eugene Cowles has signed a contract with Daniel V. Arthur, and will hereafter support Marie Cahill in all her musical comedies. A new duet for Mr. Cowles and Miss Cahill has been added to the last act of Marrying Mary, the piece in which Miss Cahill is starring this season. The Snow Man, a musical piece by Stange and DeKoven, will be brought out at the Lyric Theatre following the engagement of Sothern and Marlowe.

FREDERIC PERRY

in The Man of the Hour is very convincing as Alwyn Bennett, the young mayor who refuses to be controlled by the political boss to whom he owes his election to office.

MINNIE DUPREE

who began a successful engagement at the first of the year in The Road To Yesterday at the Lincoln Square Theatre.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS

adds much to the gaiety of The Man of the Hour by his capital portrayal of a light comedy role

The memorial window for Mrs. Gilbert is over the main entrance of the Bloomingdale Reformed Church, West End Avenue and One Hundred and Sixth Street. The window, which was painted by John La Farge, shows the scene after the ascension, where the angel is displaying to Mary the empty tomb and the figure of Christ ascending to heaven. The design typifies immortality. An inscription on the window states that it is given in loving memory of the well-known actress by her friends.

GEORGE FAWCETT

In The Man of the Hour at the Savoy Theatre Mr. Fawcett as Alderman Phelan, the political enemy of Boss Harrigan, is adding new laurels to his reputation every night.

CLARA BLOODGOOD

is starring this season in Truth, a new play by Clyde Fitch, at the Criterion Theatre.

FRANK MCVICARS

as Boss Harrigan in The Man of the Hour fits the role physically and histrionically in what may be supposed to be a manner entirely true to the original.

Foliche, a new comedy by H. Bataille, describes a certain phase of French social life, the aim of the writer having been apparently to show that the line between the half would be women and the respectable ones, has in some instances been obliterated, and that as a result the middle-class respectability is endangered. The story on which this revelation is hung concerns the misadventure of a lover of middle life, who loves to desperation a flighty maiden. For her sake he casts aside the dignity of years, and capers, but to no end, for the beauty tosses him over, preferring a very fool of a young man who is blessed with good looks.

Fritz Williams and Annie Yeamans are to support Lulu Glaser in The Aero Club, the new satirical comedy by Sydney Rosenfeld. Now that Peter Pan is playing to full houses, both here and in London, it is interesting to recall that Cecelia Loftus last year made Peter the most popular male in London, and Mr. Barrie said of her that she was the best Peter he had ever seen or could imagine.

Elsie Janis in The Vanderbilt Cup is proving as great a drawing card at the New York Theatre as when she was first seen here in the play. Miss Janis gives a number of new imitations of actors and actresses.

JAMESTOWN AND ITS ENVIRONMENT

BY E. N. VALLANDIGHAM

John Smith's domain of the Chesapeake, and old Catholic Maryland of the Calverts, and all the adjacent parts are vastly interested in the Jamestown Exposition to open this spring. Jamestown is now only a memory, and hardly so much as a ruin, so that the exposition will be held not upon the actual site of the first permanent English settlement within the bounds of the United States, but down at the mouth of the James River within easy reach of Norfolk, Hampton, Newport News, and neighboring seaports, and only a few hours by steamboat from Baltimore. Here a magic new city will rise such as only the great exposition of recent years have known how to create, and to this city and its show of industrial and other marvels hundreds of thousands will flock from all parts of the United States and Europe. The exposition will open 26 April, and close 30 November. Northern visitors will perhaps choose the spring or the autumn for visiting the exposition, though much of the summer on the shores of the broad Chesapeake is breezy and delightful. From the end of April to the early days of June, and again from the first of October to the end of November the climate of this region has the utmost charm. There is no day in all the period covered by the exposition when the mocking bird will not sing, and the autumn visitor to these parts has the pleasant experience of renewing acquaintance with robins and bluebirds and fox sparrows and other song birds known in the north as summer residents or occasionally seen in their annual migratory flight north and south.

THE HOME OF "AUDREY," THE HEROINE OF MARY JOHNSTON'S NOVEL, WILLIAMSBURG, VA.

The Exposition Site is immediately northwest of Norfolk, and its harbor will be the ample and lovely Hampton Roads. About twelve miles across the mouth of the Roads lies Old Point Comfort, at the extremity of the historic peninsula between the York and the James. A little south-west of Old Point Comfort is Hampton, facing the Roads, and a step further is Newport News, at the mouth of the James. Portsmouth lies about fifteen miles south-west of the Exposition Site, also on the Roads, and sixty or seventy miles up the James is Richmond, with the old Colonial capital. Williamsburg is on the York-James peninsula, about half way from Hampton to Richmond. Jamestown is on the River a dozen miles from Williamsburg.

Thus within a radius of less than a hundred miles of the Exposition there are more points of very old historic interest than are to be found in any other equal area in the United States, while the whole region is set thick with scenes of battle by land and sea during the Civil War. Jamestown, Yorktown, Newport News, are all associated with early colonial or Revolutionary history; the whole York-James Peninsula bristles with memories of the land struggle of the Civil War, and at Hampton Roads were fought the battles of the Merrimac and Monitor, which led to the creation of modern navies by all the great powers of the world.

Visitors to the Exposition, especially in spring or autumn should not be content to go home to the north without having seen something of tidewater Virginia and old Catholic Maryland. This old Colonial town is easily and agreeably reached in a few hours from Baltimore by the steamers plying the York River, or by rail from Newport News. Yorktown is something between a ruin and a memory. The shabby little town of to-day is the shabbier for the few survivors of its earlier glory. One such survival, the great Nelson House, stands in sullen defiance of the elements, despoiled, indeed by the hand of man and of time, but still mainly sound in its fine old brickwork, and retaining enough of its interior decoration to show how dignified was the domestic life of two centuries ago in these parts. Hard by is the smaller Nelson house, a charming old dwelling in good repair and preservation, and scattered about the little village are other old houses with low deep roofs, broad outside chimneys and stout brick walls, testifying to the solidity with which the Colonial forefathers built.

JAMESTOWN CHURCH TOWER, JAMESTOWN ISLAND

A twelve mile drive across country brings one to Williamsburg, where there was once an actual Governor's Palace with a secret passage underground to a neighboring mysterious cave, which may have been the royal governor's place of refuge in case of insurrection, but was, perhaps, only the cellar for his choice wines and liquors. Williamsburg is three or four times as big as Yorktown, but its modern houses are mainly commonplace. It has no private house with quite the impressive bulk and dignity of the larger Nelson house at Yorktown, but it has nearly a score of old seventeenth

ALthough the title role of Mr. Benson's novel (Paul) reveals an interesting personality, most readers will find themselves unwillingly attracted by that strange and almost inhuman character, Theodore Beckwith. This man is something absolutely new in fiction. He is a puny creature, physically, but he has the power to inspire in others obedience and fear. His light, unwinking eyes meet the gaze of all comers with a steady answering look. He is cruel, and he takes a singular delight in those who possess the physical vitality denied to him. His great, strong valet, the valet's stout, rosy wife, their sturdy infant, all please him, because of their physical vitality. He even rejoices in the discovery that his wife and his secretary are in love with each other, and it is his special pleasure to see them dance together, because they are young, handsome, and in love. The curious malevolence of this dreadful being reaches such a point at last that Paul, the secretary, feels that he must be killed. Out of this decision grows a study of remorse, which is a very unusual attempt in modern fiction. To tell the outcome of the story would be unfair to the reader, but it is permitted to say, that the end is less depressing than it for a time threatens to be. Paul is a marked improvement upon The Image in the Sand, in which Mr. Benson dealt not very successfuly in Oriental mysticism. The character of Beckwith may or may not be accepted as a possible human manifestation, but it lends considerable distinction to the book, though distinction of a painful kind.

THings Worth Doing is a book full of the most ingenious and elaborate things to be done at home. The text describes minutely what is to be done and how to do it, and the illustrations are nicely adapted to elucidate the letter-press. Part First contains eighteen chapters describing special methods of preparing for a lawn frolic, a circus at home, an Easter party with new games, a Punch and Judy show, and special games for Hallowe'en, Thanksgiving, St. Valentine's Day, Christmas, and other occasions. Part Two tells how to make The Miniature Seven Wonders of the World, and Part Three gives recipes for making a great variety of things for home, gift days and fairs. This book is really amazing in its scope and variety.

THe ancient province of Brittany differs essentially from the rest of France, both in configuration and in the absolute simplicity and conservatism of its natives. In its physical aspects Brittany is a land of rock-bound, forbidding coasts, which act as a protecting rampart to the wind-swept moors and wild, hilly inland districts interspersed with countless streams and rivulets. The inhabitants, as descendants of the mixed Celtic and Kymric tribes of Northern Gaul, are practically a distinct race, intermarrying as a rule only amongst themselves, speaking their own language, intensely religious by nature, and clinging to their traditions and customs with pathetic devotion.

Picturesque Brittany is the very readable record of a trip through that country of several weeks' duration. Mr. Bell has effectively supplemented the text of his wife by contributing some two dozen drawings in color. The mechanical features of the volume leave little to be desired, but regarded as a handbook for tourists it seems a pity the publishers have omitted to provide a map of this picturesque and comparatively unfamiliar section of France.

(Picturesque Brittany. By Mrs. Arthur G. Bell. With Illustrations In Color By Arthur G. Bell. London: J. M. Dent & Company. New York: E. P. Dutton & Company.)

THis novel (The Man of Property) is a little epic of the British upper middle class. These are they who own and control London. They make and save money; they own and occupy houses filled with furniture, bric-a-brac and articles of vertu expressive of their mediocre tastes. They are men of property, and in the property that they own must be included their wives, many of whom are bought with a price, some of whom revolt at the fact of being possessed. The upper middle class is here typified by a family of recent yeomen origin, fitly named Forsyte. These people, however, are not mere types; they are true individuals, with idiosyncrasies properly varying within the limits of the type, and occasionally belonging to other types. The Forsytes are exhibited at their family gatherings of many kinds—recreations, dances, evenings at home, even funerals, and in every case the exhibition is done to the life. Such a succession of social pictures has been shown in very few recent books. The Forsytes as a family, and as individuals live for us with unfailing realism. We see their strong jaws, their calculating eyes, their bewildering heap of costly possessions. Their very conversations are faithfully reported, and we realize how dull and meaningless are the social entertainments of the class.

Forsytes would get on well enough could they escape contact with persons of different make, but unhappily such escape is impossible, even within their own bosoms, as bone of their bone and flesh of their flesh, they entertain uncomfortable aliens. There are three or four such in the book, each one of which is a source of trouble. Most troublesome of all is an architect who is engaged to marry a native Forsyte, one in revolt against the traditions of the family. Perhaps this stranger would have done no great harm had he only underestimated the cost of a country house that he built for one of the Forsytes. That is a thing that architects very commonly do. This architect, however, went further and refused to repent when brought face to face with his own guilt, but that also is like his kind. As if this were not enough, the architect attacked another Forsyte property-right; he made love to the already rebellious wife of his client. One must own to some sympathy with Soames Forsyte, at once mulcted in the building of his house, and outraged in his relations with his wife. Perhaps Mr. Galsworthy means that we shall feel some such sympathy, that we shall at once see the ugliness of the Forsyte ideals and practice and the hardship of the wrongs to which one of them is subjected. It is an unpleasant world partly because its comfortable classes are so largely made up of Forsytes; but then it would be an uncomfortable world were its classes of any kind made up in large part of such architects as he that brought grief to Soames Forsyte.

A very unusual book this, perhaps a great book, certainly promising that the writer may yet produce a great book. There is nothing remotely resembling it in recent fiction; for that matter there is scarce anything in British fiction of any period that greatly resembles Mr. Galsworthy's brilliant undertaking.

(The Man of Property. John Galsworthy. G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

DOn Q has become a popular figure with the readers of short fiction, and they will welcome the returned hero in Don Q in the Sierra in this new volume, the Pritchards, mother and son, tell of Don Q's return to active life after an absence of several years. He comes back to find one of his old lieutenants living in the Sierra, and a cheap sort of ruffian playing bandit, in a vulgar fashion, and terrorizing the neighborhood. After Don Q has dealt with the scourge he reorganizes his band, and then come his adventures. The Pritchards are specially fond of showing us our British cousins in the hands of their predatory hero. There are a dozen tales here of adventures varying greatly in character. The last story tells of Don Q's death at the hands of Spanish carbineers. Of course every reader will find his sympathies going out to the hunted brigand. These stories are full of life, and strong in dramatic interest.

(Don Q in the Sierra. By K. and Hesketh Pritchard. Authors of Chronicles of Don Q, etc. With illustrations by Frank X. Chamberlin. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company.)

THe Gate of Death, one may conjecture, is another book by Arthur Christopher Benson. His Upton Letters and From a College Window, embodied what may be called a new kind of fiction, for fiction they surely were though produced with an air of truth. It was an original idea to body forth a creation under the guise of self-revealing letters, Mr. Benson did this with such success in the two books named that many readers accepted the volumes as in the nature of confessions.

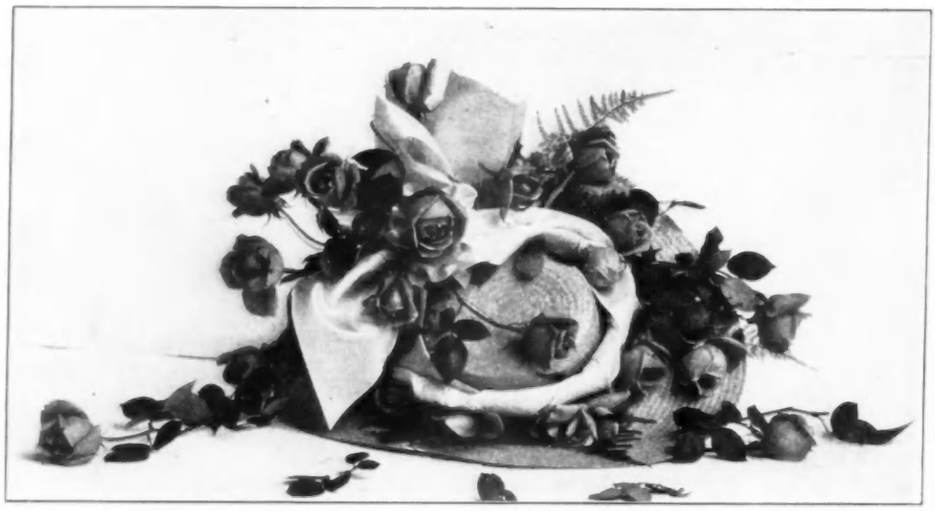
THE decorations illustrated are charming in conception for a wedding breakfast. The centre piece is a large wide-brimmed leghorn hat, cocked up on one side with bows of white liberty satin ribbon, six inches or so wide, among which and almost covering the crown entirely is a lovely arrangement of pink enchantress roses and asparagus ferns. Lower on the page are shown tiny hats designed for individual favors for the women of the party, the daintiest miniature hats imaginable, brimming over with flowers. These may be hung over the arm by their ribbons or tied coquettishly on the coiffure if the idea should be utilized for a dinner when the women are without hats. The originality of the scheme is fascinating, while the blossom-laden leghorns embody the very essence of the season for a spring wedding. The rose chalice cup in the upper left corner is the latest and newest of decorative bonbonnieres, and is to be utilized as an individual dish for salted nuts or some of the stuffed delicacies in vogue. It is delightfully constructed, with delicately curled petals of linen and a base of woven straw braid. About the stem are wound sprays of green rose leaves, from which gilt scrolls curve upward and poise over the edge of the cup. For ice cream the little poppy cups, seen at the right, in which white crepe paper is realistically formed into a most life-like reproduction, are attractive. Green stamens peep out from the heart of the flower.



A CHARMING AND NOVEL DECORATION FOR A BRIDAL TABLE
Arranged by Fleischman

An excellent menu for a spring wedding breakfast is the one given here, and following are the recipes and methods of serving some of the more unusual courses.

PINEAPPLE COCKTAILS.—Shred a pint of pineapple very fine, add three sherry glasses of curacoa and the juice of three lemons. Use enough sugar to sweeten, and a gill of good brandy, if liked, add a bottle of apollinaris just before serving, and have both the fruit-mixture and the apollinaris very cold. Serve in tall punch glasses, on entree plates with a gold lace paper doylie under each glass.

MENU

Pineapple Cocktails

Cucumber Bouillon in Cups Flecked with Parsley

Devilled Scallops in Cases

Filet Mignon with Stuffed Mushrooms and French Peas on Artichoke Bottoms

Pignola Nuts dusted in Salt — Celery Stalks stuffed with chopped Pimentoes and tied with ribbons

Grape Fruit Salad en Mayonnaise

Cream Cheese Balls between English Walnuts

Cheese Cake

Frozen Strawberries and Green Maraschino Cherries in Poppy Cups

Coffee — Bon Bons — Fruit

Champagne served throughout

DEVILLED SCALLOPS IN CASES.—Put the scallops in a saucepan, heat in their liquor to the boiling point. Remove from the liquor and chop fine. Take a scant half cup of butter and beat it to cream, add a teaspoonful of made mustard, a teaspoonful of salt and an eighth teaspoonful of cayenne. Add to this, beating thoroughly all the time, a cupful of hot white stock. Stir into this mixture the chopped scallops and their liquor, let them stand for half an hour. Put in fancy cases, sprinkle with crumbs dotted with butter and bake for twenty minutes.

CELERY STALKS STUFFED WITH PIMENTOES.—Get a large bunch of very fine white celery. Use the second row of stalks, in order to get large pieces, wash, cut them in four-inch lengths, put them in ice water until cold and crisp, take from the water, wipe with a napkin, and fill the grooves in two stalks with chopped pimentoes, put the two stalks together and tie with quarter-inch white grosgrain ribbon.

GRAPE FRUIT SALAD WITH MAYONNAISE.—Chill hearts of lettuce in ice-water, take out enough of the centre to make room for the meat of the grape fruit. Cover with a thick mayonnaise, and garnish with the very small lettuce leaves from the hearts. Set on ice to chill.

FROZEN STRAWBERRIES.—Put on ice a sufficient number of selected hulled strawberries. Mix a gill of thick strawberry syrup with a pint of good Marsala; put this in a freezer, and when frozen spread it over the strawberries, which have been arranged in the poppy cases illustrated at the top of page. Garnish with green maraschino cherries.

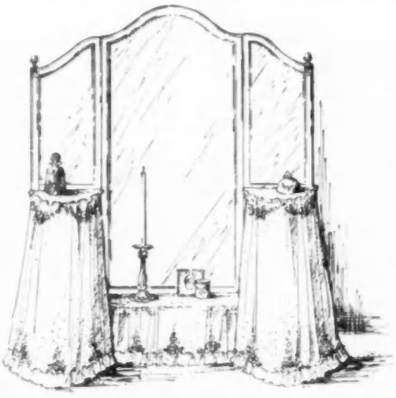
ARCHITECTURE AND FURNISHING

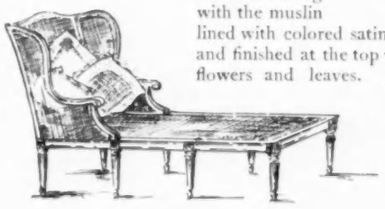
THE building of the home is so prevalent and continuous a process with Americans of all degrees that it has been decided to give over a department to the consideration of the needs of those interested in building or renovating homes. And in order that this department may be of the greatest possible service, a professional architect, Miss Josephine Chapman, has been secured to conduct it. Miss Chapman is responsible for a variety of structures, churches, club buildings, workingmen's homes, gentlemen's residences, bungalows, as well as houses such as the great majority of middle class Americans either own or hope to own in town or country. Miss Chapman's professional work is well known in Boston and New York, as well as other centres. This architect's wide experience, and her constant activity in the practice of her profession, constitute her as especially fit for the purposes of this department, where it is the intention not alone to furnish models in sketches and text, but to aid the individual to attain his or her especial building or furnishing ambition in accordance with what is both progressive and artistic by consultation with the competent authority here presented. The first paper is devoted to the consideration of a topic that is of perennial interest to women, whether they live in apartments, hotels or private houses.



NO. 1. CHEVAL GLASS

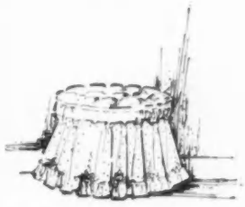
A WHITE AND ROSE BOUDOIR

This is the one room in the house which expresses the personality of its mistress. It is here that she answers her correspondence, regulates her household affairs and receives her intimate friends. Since the days of Mesdames de Pompadour, Maintenon and Recamier the boudoir has been an indispensable necessary to the woman of fashion and affairs. The idea of the boudoir originated in France, and the very word suggests the dainty and elaborate decoration which we associate with the French. The most appropriate style for the furnishing and decoration of the boudoir, therefore, is the French, and that in the style of the Louis is the most popular as well as the most adaptable to this type of room. If one cannot obtain the real antiques, very good reproductions may be found in the smart shops. As the boudoir usually leads from the sleeping room, its furnishings should harmonize with those of that apartment in color and style. The prevailing tone should be the favorite color of its owner.



NO. 3. COUCH OF CANE AND WHITE ENAMEL

A very dainty treatment is to use dotted swiss muslin over the color selected. The walls of the room are hung with the muslin lined with colored satin and arranged in folds, and finished at the top with garlands of artificial flowers and leaves. As an example, a rose scheme suggests itself. In the sketch, the walls are hung with dotted muslin over rose pink satin, and there are garlands of roses and green leaves tied with rose-colored ribbons. The window hangings are of the same materials, and are also finished with garlands of the flowers, the dressing-table and cheval mirror being draped in the same manner. The window sashes are hung with a bonne femme shade of plain white taffeta silk.



NO. 2. SLIPPER OTTOMAN

The furniture of the room is after the style of Louis XVI, with cane seats and a finish of white enamel. As the boudoir serves as a dressing as well as a sitting-room, it should contain a dressing-table and a cheval mirror. The bench shown in the sketch in front of the dressing-table will be found more practical than the usual chair. The boudoir should also have a convenient desk, roomy arm chairs and a comfortable couch. The latter is one of the most necessary articles of furniture and the interesting old Lit de Repos of cane and white enamel is not only more comfortable but far more attractive than the ugly modern upholstered couch. This is shown in Illustration

A CHARMING FRENCH BOUDOIR

What She Wears

FOR THE SOUTHERN TRIP

TO be off and away to the summer lands that lie to the south, where the fig and orange ripen, is the pleasurable anticipation of the flitting multitudes. We begin the new year with the preparations necessary, and eagerly seek what the shops provide, and spread out for our selection, in chiffons, batistes, gauzes, and the lightest of silks.

TULLE IN THE NEW MILLINERY

Milliners, as usual, give us the keynote of dress, from which we make a start, and build downward. Hat shapes are pretty much the same, but the foundations are of lace—the sheerest—as well as Irish and Venetian and Bruges. Tulle is working wonders in plaitings, shirrings, and in any number of thicknesses, for cloud-like drapery, for pompons and rosettes, bows, loops, and various windings. A wisp of white tulle over the crown of a lace hat, and a single long plume—a marvel of beauty—is what one buys for extreme elegance. Large hats are the acme of full-dress smartness, and so are long ostrich feathers of ultra quality. One needs at least six hats, and having them, will be sure to say, "I have not a hat to wear." There is need of many as the sun is so destructive, and life in the open has to be taken into account. One of the latest Monte Carlo creations is an exquisitely fine, yellow Tuscan, with such adorable brim lines on the mushroom order, but set upon the head by means of its headband and cachepeign, in a way unequaled. There is quite as much art in that bit of detail as in the trimming itself. Its sole trimming consists of a mass of overtoppling, silky, soft plumage, in silvery whites and smoke grays. No Paradise bird can boast of anything finer. The whole crown is hidden by this mound of delicate featheriness, posed so gracefully in its proportions.

WHITE AND SILVER BRAID

Another charming hat was of a white and silver braid mixture, turned up off the face in Spanish style, its brim broad, with the left side well raised. A bow of white velvet was tacked on the left, close to the white velvet hatband. A long white ostrich plume started from the left side of the crown, and swept round to the right, and was long enough to curl over the white velvet bow upon the left. There was a decided outspringing to this hat brim on the right side which was novel.

GREEN CRIN HAT

A small flat Nile-green crin hat, in unbroken circular lines, had its imperceptible crown covered with cross bands of white tulle. In front was a cluster of fine flesh-pink roses, and some extremely delicate green foliage—nothing more.

PINK BRAID HAT

A small pink hat of pink braid, with a round small bowl-inverted shaped crown, its brim bent into a point, and turned low on the black hair in front, was most attractive, a bit odd and fanciful in line. Two medium pink plumes, one on either side of the crown, were turned over the brim.

HATS—WHITE GOWNS

WHITE TEA GOWN
See "What She Wears"

TRAVELING HATS

Toque and turban shapes, trimmed with wings of every shape, are the sort of hats chosen for ordinary traveling wear and informal going about. One of the smartest Rivièra hats has little or no back to its brim, consequently shows off the dressing of the hair to perfection. It pokes decidedly in front, is tilted up and outward. Around the crown in front is a band of dark green velvet ribbon with a bow of loops in rosette form on the left, but rather forward. On the right, further back, is a cluster of pink roses with maiden-hair fern, one of the roses purposely dropped and caught into the hair, close to the neck. This style of hat, both in lace and in fancy braids, was an extremely girlish selection, bought at once.

WHITE DINNER GOWNS

Beautiful are the white gowns for dinner or dance occasions, which though not so mad a craze as formerly, still remain most popular. Through all phases of trimming, be the gown for maid or matron, the smart touch consists in ornamenting the bottom of the skirt handsomely, and covering the bodice with a match trimming. For instance, this lovely creation of white crêpe de chine, flowered in white satin, but very delicately. Six inches from the bottom was an insetting of white lace in oval medallions, linked together with narrow crimped white ribbon work, which also framed all the lace ovals. Its full skirt at the top was laid in plaits, and carried up à la princesse, with a crepe de chine belt drapery, high placed. The rest of the low bodice was of draped lace, English Point, so arranged that a point of the lace was tacked onto the waist at intervals. A lace puff sleeve with a pointed over cap, dropped over each undersleeve, in effect very graceful. In front, two pointed tab-ends fell under a cluster of roses to match those on the hat, quite in the middle of the bust. Flowers, as a bodice decoration, are single roses, or else in small clusters.

WHITE TEA-GOWN

The illustration this week affords a charming example of a diaphanous white tea-gown of mousseline de soie, over an under fitting of soft white satin. The princess skirt, extremely full, is trimmed with hand embroidery, and open stitcheries, both for heading and for an entre-deux. The embroidery in crescents is in white silk floss, with silver spangles for part outline, which gives a charming effect, while the coarse silk twist in the entredeux is lined with silver paillettes, adding in brilliancy to the bordering. The top of the bodice, back and front, repeats the skirt embroidery design, and is furthermore enhanced by a flounce of real Brussels lace, doubled over the sleeve tops, which are in puff style, with a cross band of the pailletted embroidery. The half-long, close-fitting sleeves are of lace, prettily trimmed with lace plaitings. The front is especially smart, with its sash ends flounced with real lace, and an unusually fine design of floss embroidery and paillettes of silver, filling up the width of the mousseline, finished on the edge with a narrow silver lace.

One more white lace and mousseline de soie gown, belonging to a young matron, gives a charming idea of the creation worn at a dinner recently. The skirt alone was a thing of beauty, in its half-train, which seemed a mass of lace hand work. On a white mousseline foundation, gathered into a belt, half-way to the knee, fell a transparent flounce of white net and real Brussels lace in this order: First, a lace entredeux, then a hem of double net; then a second lace entredeux, another double net hem, until there were four entredeux with double net hems the last for edge finish. A glimpse of the mousseline skirt then followed. Below came an extremely deep flounce, starting with a lace entredeux, and repeating nine rows of lace and net alternating. The bottom edge of net was much wider, and turned into more of a ruche finish. A low, square neck bodice of plaited net, both back and front, was trimmed with a half-Empire flowered ribbon belt drapery, raised higher in the back into a rosette, with half-long ribbon ends. These were trimmed with a flounce corresponding to that upon the skirt, and very finely plaited. The short sleeves repeated the net and lace combination of the skirt, and fell over a wide pouf of mousseline. A bouquet of white gardenias on the left of corsage was a perfect choice. The décolletage was arranged by having several narrow rows of net plaitings overlap each other. The wearer's superb pearl necklace was the only jewel she wore.

NEW SLEEVE WRINKLE

Sleeves have not varied very much, the half and the long sleeve holding fast to familiar features. But one of the French models recently arrived —a mulberry-red silk trimmed with superb Irish lace and velvet harmonizing with the silk—had sleeves that were fitted close to the arm, in a crush drapery of silk and mousseline de soie as high as the silk sleeve-cap fell over.

EVENING CLOTH CAPES

Deep cloth capes for evening wear, in the palest evening shades and in white, have two features that are quite pronounced. One is, that the bottom of the open fronts is rounded with a high, curved line, which shortens the front line very considerably, and permits the fronts, because of the wide curve of the entire mantle, to fall in graceful folds. The other feature is a jabot treatment arranged by the cutter, which adds immensely to the graceful front lines, and in itself acts as a trimming, the ends having a backward slope as well. Passementeries of the same shade with ornamentations of the same character, are used with a lavish profusion, the trimmings of this sort being extremely fine and well made. Buttons to match appear, the passementerie being often fitted so as to leave centres of cloth or velvet. Very few high collars are met in wraps of this class, as boas have made such collars superfluous affairs.

HER SOUTHERN TOILETS

FOR DESCRIPTIONS OF FASHIONS SEE PAGE 72—A

GLIMPSES

VASTLY BECOMING—

To bridesmaids are the short veils of tulle or real lace, which are held by a coronet of the flowers chosen for the bouquet, or else by a wired twist of gauzy ribbon with a cluster of short ostrich tips towards left side. These veils are miniatures of the one worn by the bride as to texture, and if of lace are usually her gift.

FLUFFY MUFFS—

Of ostrich feathers and lace are being carried by bridesmaids in place of the time-honored bouquet of flowers, and there are lovely scarf effects of the lace bordered with ostrich to wear with them, which will prove useful on many other festive occasions.

WHAT—

Very broad braids enter into fashionable hairdressing, both as coronet and for crossing in the back, intermingled with loops and puffs. Both puffs of hair as well as short curls, are the predominating false hair purchases of the moment. The general line of dressing the hair is a high one, whether a pompadour is worn or not. The arrangement across the brow is a matter of becomingness. Some women separate the pompadour in the middle front without showing a marked division, and toss above it loose hair puffs or very short curled locks of hair. The broad low curve of the pompadour in the back is no longer desirable as it has passed into old style. A profusion of hair turned into broad marcel waves, with a charming irregularity of line in the placing of curls and hair-puffs above it, is the smart arrangement well-dressed women are following. The size of the head is apparently greatly diminished.

PAILLETTE—

Embroidery on transparent or opaque fabrics has been tabooed then revived off and on for years past, but whether the present attitude of dismissal is to prove a genuine and final effort depends upon whether small pearl bead outlining and ornamentation is to prove as popular in connection with gown decorations. The latest smart evening costumes show a great deal of it in the hand-wrought work that trims the lower part of so many fine skirts, and repeats itself on the low bodices.

DRESSING—

Room furnishings, screens, boxes for gloves, mouchoirs, jewels, laces, etc., covered with Louis XVI silken stuffs have reached a popularity they well deserve. Among the novelties of the season are those dainty Saxe figures, costumed in brocades, in the most inimitable court manner. Fragonard and Watteau would have praised them. One advantage is that the costume period may be changed to suit one's caprice, or when its first freshness has departed.

A—

Very inviting, as well as artistic wall covering, is a gray Japanese grass-cloth almost double the width of the usual wall-paper and of special merit to hang water-colors or gay colored prints against. The same grass-cloth comes in several solid colors to suit various schemes of furnishings. For nursery purposes this grass-cloth, if in gray, is particularly favorable as a wall covering for those who wish to give the room a barn-yard, or menagerie dado or frieze treatment, so immensely amusing to children as well as instructive. Not only may one buy the five-feet long picture decorations, but single birds, beasts, fowls or fishes may be had to work out something quite original, or to aid in lengthening or toning the special paper strips of childish preference.

THERE—

Is no diminution in the sales of those pretty little toy pincushions made of colored velvets and framed in silver, slippers, cradles, chairs and sofas.

UMBRELLA—

Handles in gun metal run down to such length that no wood is perceptible. These are very slender in stem lines, with delicately turned crutch handles, and seen this season in greater numbers than the metal ball, once so popular. But round ball silver chased ornaments still keep their hold upon public taste. In Lapis lazuli and Jade they hold their vogue, while crystal handles, when long and slender are treated to an over net work in fine silver cord work, which among the new ideas lately evolved proves most effective.

IF—

One were asked what the advanced dress fabrics resembled, the answer might well be, "Nothing new, except names, colors and designs." The old and familiar fabrics are present, with one or two mixtures not tried before. No one need complain, however, for the fabrics are very pretty and inviting. Besides, we have been submerged with novelties, and it is well to see old materials that we know the value of, and like brought up-to-date for another season.

COSTUMES SEEN AT TEAS—DULL TONES PREVAIL— GRAY MOUSSELINE AND FUR—ORANGE VELVET WRAP—SKATING COSTUMES SOME GAY GOWNS

Like an old time picture, stepped from its frame, was a charming girl who walked into the tea room of a famous hotel to-day. Her steps were mincing, indeed it seemed difficult for her to walk at all, so high were her heels, and so heavily dragged the velvet of her Empire gown.

It was taupe-colored; the skirt hemmed with sable fur and gathered high at the back in a cluster of shirrs, held in place by a long buckle of old silver set with opaque stones that gleamed dully under the electric lights.

Her sleeves puffed broad at the shoulders with little lace under puffs and frills. Fascinatingly she carried her huge flat muff—held high in both hands—close under her pretty tilted chin. Her hands appeared abnormally small with the much wrinkled wrists of her gloves, and the lace ruffles that fell from her elbows. Surely she was French—this ravishing creature—for she had the red, red mouth and the dead white, yet creamy, skin that only the French woman knows how to produce.

From her small toque of gold net, veiled by taupe-colored mousseline de soie, waved a long ostrich feather that matched her costume; from one side to the other it curled, circling the back of her neck and forming a delicious background to her exquisite face. The only relief to the sombreness of her costume were the pins that held her toque to her elaborately dressed hair, great balls of turquoises, specked with tiny diamonds.

The sable fur that she wore over her shoulders was of the new form, made of two wide skins laid flatly; the corners of the two ends joined in the back between the shoulders, under a handsome passementerie ornament with deep falling fringe. The front ends finished with two thick long tails; the skins were short, ending just below the bust. This shape has a cape effect and immensely broadens the shoulders.

BRILLIANT CORAL VELVET TOILETTE

At present at afternoon gatherings dull tones in costumes prevail to such an extent that the entrance to-day of a young woman in bright coral velvet caused a decided rustling as heads were turned to observe her. Her costume was quite lovely, however, and decidedly the dernier cri in design. On her black hair, tres undule, rested a toque of white swans down, trimmed with a short tuft of white coque's plumes held by a gold buckle. Her muff of the new "game bag" shape was of spotted ermine. Her half long coat had the back cut to perfectly define the figure, but with the high-waisted effect that gives such an enchanting length of line. The skirts of it rounded in front and were very open, turning back revers from a swagger waistcoat of unspotted ermine, buttoned double breasted with gold. A fat bow of black velvet held a little lace jabot at the closing of her high, turn-over linen collar.

WONDERFUL COMBINATIONS OF FURS AND FILMINESS

Furs are of extraordinary beauty this season. They are treated by clever and agile fingers, as are the most supple materials. They are decorated and redecorated, with embroideries, ribbons, and wonderful laces, and turned into marvellous garments, achieving beauty rather than warmth.

At a smart rue de la Paix couturiere's the other day I was enslaved by a wondrous costume of gray mousseline de soie and fur. The skirt was gathered full to the round and moderately short waist; from the knees it was lengthened by a flounce of a thin, smooth, gray, fur, showing several shades of gray and shining like moire silk. A fitted belt, high in the back and very low in front, was of the fur inset with gray lace and silk embroidery. The sleeves, great falling puffs, were of the mousseline de soie drawn into odd little fur cuffs that matched the belt. Above the belt, the bodice was an indescribable mélange of lace, fur and mousseline de soie, with artistic touches of dull pink in the front and about the throat. Who could resist falling a victim to such a gown!

RAVISHING EVENING GOWNS AND WRAPS

Also enchanting was an evening frock of smoke-colored tulle, hung over golden gauze and embroidered in relief with silver roses—the silver embroidery done in several tones. On the left side of the bust, nestling in folds of smoke tulle, was a bow of pale, rose-colored velvet; the long slender ends were knotted at intervals, finally finishing in gold and silver tassels.

And fancy an evening wrap of deep burnt orange velvet, deeply bordered with sable and lined with lace flounces over palest yellow. Over a deep collar of sable fur turned one of heavy Irish lace, the figures accented with ermine tails. This cloak was very loose, with kimono sleeves. With the curious lack of logic one sees in the modes of to-day an Empire effect was achieved by the fullness of the back drawn into a cluster under a big buckle.

To wear with this cloak of orange velvet was a gown of white mousseline de soie. The skirt was embroidered nearly to the belt; half way it was cut by a wide band of orange velvet, the figures of the embroidery cunningly hiding the edges. The bodice was composed of long lace points hung over a high wrinkled girdle of orange velvet; between the points in the back it twisted into a long slender bow at the top.

ODD SKATING DRESS

While watching the skaters at the Palais de Glace, one day lately, I noted a stunning costume of heavy black mousseline de soie trimmed with otter fur. The skirt was long and extremely full and on either side of the front and back it was striped with the fur. The corsage was evenly striped with fur, and bands of the mousseline, plaited finely; it bloused ever so little over a beautifully fitted girdle of the fur nearly covered with silver embroidery. This defined the figure only in the back and front for the curiously drooping sleeves appeared all in one with the bodice in the way that is now so much the thing. This, by the way, is extremely difficult to accomplish.

BEWITCHING GREEN CLOTH FROCK

Quite as conspicuously odd was a costume of willow green cloth. The trailing skirt was full, yet so clinging that the movement of the limbs were fully revealed. The bodice was exactly like a kimona, cut off at the waist-line, and girdled softly with a sash of darker velvet; this was knotted lightly once, at one side of the front, leaving long ends. Where the bodice crossed below the bust it was adorned with bows made of twisted ropes of velvet, and immense silver buttons. The same ornamentation was on the edges of the short loose sleeves that were met by her much wrinkled gloves of a light, greenish gray kid.

The hat, all of black velvet laid in many folds, hugged about the girl's face in the most bewitching fashion. It was drawn down close to her ears by a broad ribbon of black satin that tied behind in a big bow. At the left, just at an angle with her evebrow, was poised a bunch of pale pink roses.

A young woman on skates was enticingly pretty in an odd little costume of black velvet. Its short skirt was laid in box plaits that fell quite free from the belt. Inside the hem were several silk ruffles that made a lovely frou-frou and also did away with the necessity of a petticoat. The jacket was the chef-d'œvure, straight and very short, like the caraco of a cle[illegible]. In its lower edge were cut slits and thr[illegible]gh these passed a wide, soft, plaid ribbon [illegible]tied in a bow in front with two short loop[illegible] and two ends; one end was left very short, [illegible]e other reached nearly to the hem of the skir[illegible] and was finished with a tassel holding all the [illegible]ades of the plaid. The bow held the jacke[illegible] together at the waist-line, but above it sloped [illegible]ay from crossing folds of the plaid ribbon tha[illegible]haped a waistcoat. The velvet sleeves drooped [illegible]r twists of the plaid that banded the elb[illegible]s. The swagger hat that topped this costu[illegible] was a dish-shaped thing of black velvet settl[illegible] closely her hair and fairly covered with wavi[illegible] coque's plumes.

"Ravishing things they are, these frivolities of lace, ribbon and embroideries."—Paris.

NOVELTIES IN THE PARIS SHOPS

All through the shopping hours before the shops of the fascinating rue de la Paix stand lines of carriages, while their owners are inside entranced over the multitude of pretty things displayed. There are wondrous crystal balls seemingly solid and without an opening, but one discovers in their depths a tiny watch. Other balls are seemingly of solid polished gold and are found to hold a tiny powder puff quite sufficient to powder a dainty nose. There are lovely cases of fine leather, no larger than an ordinary pocket book, holding the modish tiny opera glass, a fan and a little memorandum book with a gold pencil, also a bit of a mirror.

New chains, very slender, are strung at wide intervals with enormous colored stones; and the same are set as rings, showing no setting. Watch guards are hung with a single large stone of uneven outline, either cut or uncut. And there are gold lockets, thin as a coin, yet with sufficient space inside for a treasured portrait. Beautiful little pendants, there are, also, of dull brownish gold with a bas relief taken from life, that are wholly entrancing.

The latest vanity boxes are made of highly polished gold, perfectly plain and smooth, like the mirrors of the ancients.

FASCINATING EVENING SCARVES

In preparation for the flitting south, to take the place of furs, are scarves of every imaginable materials and of a length and width unprecedented. Ravishing things they are, these frivolities of lace, ribbons and embroideries; enriched by rings, passementeries, and bits of fur in borders and centre. They suit the voluminous skirts, the drooping shoulders, and the round waists of the present modes. And how quickly the modern elegante has learned to adapt her strong square shoulders with new grace to these adjuncts of a languid and sentimental period.

BEAUTIFUL COATS OF FUR

This is the time when one sees in all public places the prettiest afternoon street clothes of the year. All the world is at home for the holidays and all seem moved by the same impulse, to help throng the smart shops, hotel restaurants, and tea rooms. The weather, without frost, but curiously su[illegible]ess, has a chill humidity that strikes cold—[illegible]dderable. Passing fom one's carriage to the [illegible]elter of a doorway every one is swathed in [illegible]rs.

THE BEST PATTERNS

A Perfect pattern should be correct in every particular. Vogue patterns are right from their very inception, as they are cut always from the very smartest, most distinctive and most advanced designs.

A gown cut by a Vogue pattern has the first essential to fashionable effect—the right placing of the lines. Unless a gown be cut on smart lines it cannot impart good style to the wearer. Trimmings cannot conceal bad cut.

The fine points by which hand-made frocks are distinguishable from machine-made differentiate Vogue patterns from all others. All Vogue patterns are hand-made. Each separate piece is cut, stamped and folded by hand.

The working details of Vogue patterns are simplicity itself. Each piece is plainly stamped—collar, front, back, etc. There are no puzzling perforations. When cutting, one need not continually reverse the pieces to consult directions, all seams, tucks and trimming being traced, which is possible only with all-hand made patterns. Every Vogue pattern can be easily followed, but the Vogue Weekly Coupon Pattern is intended specially for the novice in gown making—for her who would be her own dressmaker. These coupon patterns are published with a diagram showing exactly how each part is placed on the material, and with full instructions for making and trimming.

Flat patterns are those that have the various parts of the design stamped, traced and folded ready for cutting.

A pinned pattern is half of a gown made in paper. It is the flat pattern pinned together, and in some instance stacked with thread, to show exactly how the garment is to be put together. And this pinned pattern can be taken apart and used for cutting or a flat duplicate may be ordered.

WORKING DIRECTIONS FOR NO. 413

THe current pattern is of a riding skirt for cross saddle. It has a separate front width, which, when buttoned in place, makes it appear like an ordinary walking skirt, with inverted plaits at the back.

It is exceedingly simple to make, being just like a very wide pair of trousers. The small sketch shows the skirt when used for walking, the larger one with one half of the front plastron turned back and buttoned over the other half. It is better to secure the half of each of the top and bottom edges to the skirt to prevent its flapping back when riding.

A strip of the cloth is laid down under the edge which is turned back, but it is so well pressed and slip-hemmed that it does not show when riding. If preferred, the stitchings may be carried all the way down both sides to simplify this. Both must have a strip of interlining of either linen or fine French canvas.

The skirt is fitted over the hips very perfectly by means of darts, which, with the seams, must be very well pressed. On the pressing depends the result as to whether the skirt looks homemade, or as if turned out by a good tailor. A hot, but not too hot, heavy iron, a wet piece of cloth, and some water should accompany the making throughout, and when an edge is turned, or any part arranged, pressing should follow, even though it will all be pressed later, as for instance, the plastron and front edges.

It is as well to line the seat and some way down the inner seams with either leather or firm linen, according to the texture used for the skirt.

The diagram illustrates the several parts of pattern placed on folded fifty-four inch wide habit cloth, of which three and a half yards are required.

The pattern consists of one each of front, side, and back gores, and half the front plastron.

The notches show how the parts are joined together, the rest being quite plain sailing. The seam edges should be well notched to make them lie very flat. The waist edge is finished by a narrow band.

VOGUE POINTS

LIngerie gowns are being made on princess lines, but with the waist-line in the normal place, which means that only women of well proportioned figures can dare this charming fashion. That the era of short-waisted effects was somewhat on the wane was hinted at in many of the early winter evening gowns, when waist and skirt were separate, the former finished with a rather narrow girdle that emphasized the fact of the departure from Directoire styles. The desirability of the princess effect, however, for the lovely creations of sheer fabrics and lace, was too apparent to permit its being relegated to oblivion, and with a few slightly modified touches, it is being hailed as supreme for summer frocks. Some, even many of these dresses, it must be understood, are not made on the long, uninterrupted lines by which the princess style is best known, but consists instead of a bodice and skirt joined deftly by means of a lace inserting, or some other device, at waist-line, which gives the princess effect. This to some figures is more becoming, as a little fullness can be introduced in either part, where otherwise a severely plain line would be given by the usual long unbroken seams.

Quite new are the hand-embroidered coin spots of a medium size and close together, on narrow bands of sheer French batiste that alternate with Valenciennes insertion in an entire costume. The skirt of this extremely chic little gown follows the ruling of the season for all washable fabrics for daytime wear out of doors, and clears the ground by a generous margin, thereby revealing pretty silk stockings and patent leather Colonial ties with a quaint silver buckle at instep.

Novel and useful are the glass paper weights with a clock inset in the top. They are octagonal so can be made to stand; but the clock is more plainly seen when face up.

Machine-made garments do not have the distinctive elegance nor the wearing qualities of those knitted or crocheted by hand.

Every woman who knits or crochets feels great pride in her work — or she doesn't. This depends on the yarn she has used.

The "Fleisher" Yarns are the acknowledged standard of excellence, combining all the qualities required by the most exacting knitter or crocheter — evenness, loftiness, elasticity. They are dyed in a full line of colors, from the deep, rich shades used for afghans, to the light, delicate tints for infants' garments.

The superior qualities of The "Fleisher" Yarns have earned for them a national reputation. A garment made of them will stand the test of wear and wash.

THE QUESTION OF STOCKINGS AND SLIPPERS

IT is scarcely necessary to say that silk stockings are a questionable possibility for the girl or woman of limited income, but one is tempted even at the sacrifice of some other luxury, to indulge in a few pair, at least for evening wear. These, if purchased, will perforce be plain, for even the simplest of embroidered ones are very dear, and eat a big hole in the pocket. Plain, sheer black silk stockings are, after all, almost more becoming to the foot than anything else, and one can embroider simple or elaborate patterns one's self in odd moments. The wardrobe we are setting out to build up on a little over forty dollars a month does not allow of more than three evening gowns, at the outside, and one of these should be the practical gown with both high and low waist, so that it takes but a small number of stockings to match them. And if these are a strain on the resources (for satin slippers are entailed, also, in the outlay) make up your mind to do without such accessories, although undeniably attractive, and use well-cut patent leather slippers, with a smart chiffon rosette, or a tiny buckle, with your entire evening outfit. One need never be at all conscious or uncomfortable when shod in black, for at the smartest balls of the winter I have seen well-known people thus turned out, and there are other reasons than those of economy which militate in favor of it, for the apparent size of one's feet is greatly reduced. Thus to bring these remarks down to facts, the only necessary slippers are patent leather, with an addition of as many pair in colors as one needs or can afford. Old slippers are always on hand crying to be worn out after their freshness is gone, and these are serviceable at home. Carriage boots are requisite, health demands them, even if one does not suffer from cold, but unless gaieties are indulged in to an excessive extent their purchase is only necessary once in every other year, or still less often.

WHAT TO WEAR IN BOOTS

For morning wear a good stout pair of calfskin, high button shoes, fill all requirements, and by stout do not understand me as countenancing clumsy boots, but a substantial sole, made on a smartly turned last. The greatest neatness is contributed to one's appearance by sending the shoes at intervals to have the heels tapped, for nothing looks more slovenly than worn off edges, and these come surprisingly soon if worn on city pavements. A great many women wear low patent leather shoes in the afternoon for calling, either a tie on the Colonial order, or a slipper, and this is of course perfectly correct, with long gowns, but certainly precarious in our climate. Safer, by far, are high, kid-topped patent leather shoes. Every one runs into the country constantly for week-ends, these days, and the buttoned town boot does not have at all the right air for walking or skating, so heavy, laced sporting footwear of some sort must be provided. There is quite a choice, either tan or black calf are stylish, and there are several models that are exceedingly good. One in black is built up very high, and lined in mole skin. These are unnecessarily extravagant, however, and an ordinary skating boot will answer for all uses. Bedroom slippers one may have in quantities of materials, as we all know, quite the most fetching being mules of kid or figured silk to match the wrapper.

ORDINARY STOCKINGS

Lisle thread costing about fifty cents a pair answer well for walking and with high boots. There is a certain make that is unusually fine and nice to the touch, with a punctured clocking up the sides, not really open work, but done with a series of pierced holes. There are many good stockings, however, at this price.

WRAPPERS AND DRESSING SACQUES

The innate daintiness of a woman is never more definitely expressed than by her bedroom belongings, and this is one of the points where it is difficult for a slender purse to accomplish attractive results, for these garments are expensive and subject to much hard wear. Fresh clean room gowns can be managed, however, with care so that even if one cannot go robed in delicious silks and laces, this charm of immaculate cleanliness and refinement will not be lacking. It is altogether impossible at small cost to have an assortment for both summer and winter. One must use the same garment pretty much all the year around. Albatross is fine and light and while warm in winter is not oppressive during the spring and autumn months, so it is by far the best selection. It launders wonderfully. A long wrapper of it and a short matinée may be elaborated to suit the individual, trimmings of louisine ribbon in rosettes of soft bows suit it admirably. A plain style may be made very pretty and effective by a broad lingerie collar and cape flounces under a short sleeve cap, and if these are tacked in they may be easily detached and laundered when it is unnecessary to put the entire gown in the tub.

I have seen this year some charming albatross long negligées in all colors, simply fashioned and embellished with quite a bit of hand-embroidery, which are not expensive, and come within the limitations of our prescribed sum. This column is not gauged with allowances for a saving by much sewing at home, it is rather to meet the needs without the necessity of the girl, or woman who has little time to spare from social duties for needlework, but who strives to dress suitably and smartly among people of the great world who are more richly endowed. The dressing sacque, however, may serve as a bit of fancy work, and an economy at the same time, and I suggest for it the pattern shown in our issue of 29 November, on page 794. The directions are given there and it is only the matter of a few hours' work to turn one out complete. Albatross on the outside and a lining of china silk entail but small outlay, and the edges may be faced in six inch wide louisine ribbon, showing three inches on both sides. At the bust place two large full ribbon rosettes with flowing ends, and one has the daintiest possible little combing sacque or a coffee jacket in which to breakfast upstairs. These two negligées with a muslin wrapper of some sort for summer will carry one along nicely. A perfectly plain bath robe, of crash towelling or eiderdown saves the wrapper tremendously, but it is not necessary to take this when visiting as bath gowns are provided as a rule for every guest, and if not the long albatross dressing gown will serve.

WINDOW BOXES FOR THE HOME

THere are few homes so situated that window boxes cannot be used to adorn them in summer. They can be used on either the first or upper floors, but on a two-story house they are generally used on but the lower one. They are not expensive, unless one desires to carry out a scheme of decoration as to the boxes, or indulges in the arttile affairs we see on sale, but rarely see on the windows. There are many packing boxes which are the right size for window boxes, such as those in which window shades and fishing rods (jointed) are shipped, and these can usually be had for ten or fifteen cents apiece. They should be fortified in the middle with cross cleats, and need not be lined. But no matter what kind of boxes you use, any kind will do, if they are well filled and painted a dark green, or a color to match the house. The bottom of the boxes should be filled to a depth of two inches with broken charcoal, or soft-coal cinders, about the size of filberts. Upon this put good potting soil to a depth of at least five inches, but never higher than within an inch of the top of the boxes. While any kind of blooming plants may be planted in window boxes, there are some which are particularly adapted to them. In the front of the box, next the street, plant Vinac Major, two inches apart, so that when it has attained its growth it will fall over and cover out of sight the front of the box with a covering of green and white. Fill in behind it with red, or red and white geraniums alternated, or with any of the ruffled petunias, or the new hybrid verbenas, close enough together that when in full bloom, the box will look filled to overflowing. It is best to fill the boxes with large-sized blooming plants rather than small ones that will not look well until late in the summer. The boxes will have to be watered daily late in the afternoon is best, but the bottoms must be made to allow free drainage.

SEEN IN THE SHOPS

THE weeks following directly upon the holidays are devoted by the shoppers to the purchase of underwear, the process being either a systematic stocking of one's supply or a culling of pieces here and there from the attractive offerings. These columns are not available for news of the many special sales that are now on as these are too soon over to be of practical interest here, but among the regular lines there are many desirable articles to be had, and none more so than the low-priced French hand-made lingerie that has come to be a specialty of one establishment, where it is to be had in the greatest variety of patterns and prices, calculated to meet the requirements of every taste and purse. In comparison with domestic goods it is not only preferable as a rule in point of wearing qualities and appearance, but often it is the cheaper of the two. For those who appreciate the daintiness and refinement of simple hand-made garments in contrast to machine manufactured goods of more pretention, I have chosen this week's sketches in order to show what excellent values are given at this shop at moderate cost.

Every stitch of this lingerie is handsewn, and the material used a lightweight French percale, durable and practical, and quite fine enough for every day use, even by the very fastidious woman.

WALKING PETTICOAT

Sketch 1 shows a severely simple underskirt, (its only ornamentation a scalloped ruffle), but one that will preserve neat edges as long as it is worn, and never nick out on the flounces. It is made with the ordinary French top, which pulls up with a draw string. Careful cutting gives it a graceful hang and flare at the bottom, and it is not skimped after the manner of so many inexpensive skirts. Price $2.50.

PETTICOATS OF HIGHER PRICE

Besides this first example, interesting for use in walking, skating, etc., where perishable frills are out of place, there are several jupons of fine quality and accordingly more considerable cost, which are also of remarkable value. At $9.00 is to be had one with a sheer linen overflounce worked with clusters of flowers intermixed with dots, while both upper and lower flounces are scalloped, the one in broad; the other in narrow curves. At the same price one may have a lace-trimmed skirt, made of nainsook at the top, below which is a very wide frill of lawn, crossed by two inch wide tucks, between rows of feather-stitching and bordered with German Valenciennes, generously fulled on and measuring at least four inches. The foot ruffle is finished by a plain hem.

I wish especially to enlist your enthusiasm for another petticoat selling at $12.00, which has the greatest amount of laciness and frou-frou about the feet, and is a most unusual and excellent bargain for a dancing petticoat or to be worn under evening gowns. The flounce, of filmy lawn, is intersected by triple narrow tucks, above and below a broad lace insertion, while at the edge is a six-inch edging and the second ruffle is bordered also, with a narrower lace.

Embroidery and lace are exquisitely combined into one of the daintiest, most entrancing petticoats that the mind of woman can conceive. The very moderation with which the eyeletted pattern of conventionalized wistaria, is disposed is one of its chief charms. The blossom sprays are carried down to the rococo scallop, which branches up boldly onto the flounce. This, by the way, reaches quite to the knee, and is headed by a narrow beading. Lace is lavishly used to trim the skirt about the feet, and it is very handsome and rich in effect. Price $18.00.

DOMESTIC PETTICOAT AT A BARGAIN

While I am devoting my attention this week principally to French goods, I cannot omit mention of an exquisite skirt exhibited in the department devoted to American-made lingerie. From the knee down it holds a flounce of rare beauty, fashioned of Point de Paris insertions and bands of transparent embroidery with drawn work at the edge. The lace is placed at the bottom in a full ruffle. Blue ribbons run through an inch-wide beading placed at the head of the flounce, and tie in long drooping bows at the side. Price $10.00.

FRENCH CORSET COVER

This, which may be seen in the second drawing, is cut after the accepted perfect fitting model, in which clusters of tucks are laid both back and front with a drawstring at the waistline in the back. Scallops finish the neck and sleeves, while the tiny padded flowers are scattered vine-like across the bust. Every detail, even of hemming and button-holing is carefully finished, and the garment costs but $2.25.

At $2.50 is offered another cache corset, differing only in elaboration of design from that just described. The encrustations are in the form of wee periwinkles, flanked by pointed leaves, alternating with polka dots, piled in pyramids.

A lovely arrangement of lace is made use of for the decoration of a third example. The embroidery owes its conception to the orchid, which is presented on waving irregular stems. These are made into medallions by an inset of lace arranged on either side the flowers in half moons, not joining, however, at the top. The scalloping of the edge is also particularly pretty. Among a score of lovely patterns this one stood out by reason of its originality. It costs $5.00.

FRENCH DRAWERS

In these, the originals of the third illustration, the ruffle is attached by means of fancy stitch designated as English point. It is embroidered at the front with a design of wreaths, dots, and flowers. To my mind this model, which, by the way is open, is quite elaborate enough, and it is daintiness itself in every particular of make. Ribbon bows are attached as a finish. The price asked is $1.75 a pair, and it would be impossible to find drawers offering better wearing qualities than these.

LACE-TRIMMED FRENCH DRAWERS

Some, however, may prefer to expend more for a lace-betrimmed drawer, having its ruffle embroidery surrounded medallion-wise with insertions. Price $3.75.

A FRENCH CHEMISE

such as that shown in the fourth drawing is very attractive. A wreath of flowers curves across the front, above which are the ribbon eyelets. A plain hem forms the bottom of the chemise skirts. This is reasonable indeed as for it is asked only $1.50.

FRENCH NIGHTGOWN

A clever model is this, since it combines the cape sleeve, by far the most popular of any at present, with the French handwork, which until recently has been procurable only in inexpensive gowns, in very plain uninteresting models. Another special point in favor of this gown, which is illustrated in the last drawing, is the use of plaits at the back to replace the usual yoke. The scalloped neck, with its embellishment of embroidery draws close by ribbons, and for a gown of such moderate price it is most exceptional. It costs $2.50.

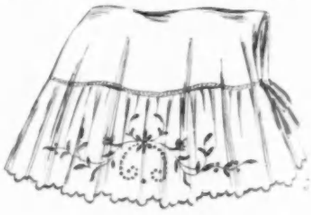
ACCORDION PLAITED ALBATROSS WRAPPER

On one hand to-day we have an advance in prices that is gravely alarming, but offsetting this increase in living expenses are the good values that one is continually finding in ready made garments in the shops. All the latest and most successful models are so reproduced that the price is not prohibitive to the majority. For instance a wrapper was shown me which is charming and yet costs but $10.00. It is of albatross, and is made in pink, mauve, or blue, the whole fall of the material being accordion plaited from the shoulder to the flounce. The latter is plain, eighteen inches or so in width, and attached to the body of the gown by a heading of itself. A broad collar is edged with narrow Valenciennes lace, the same intersecting it in diagonal lines. At the front it is fetchingly draped, being caught fichu-wise at the bust, and carried down in ruffles to the waistline. The elbow sleeve is a full puff with a pendant ruffle, plaited from edge to edge.



WHITE KID BELTS

are a necessity in one's outfit for the southern trip and two varieties are offered at reasonable prices which are good both as to style and material. One is shaped, wider at the back and measuring about an inch and a half at the front. The buckle is square and of bright finished brass. Price $1.00. A dull gold Colonial buckle with two heavy prongs is used for the clasp of the second belt offered at $1.50. This is rather wide, say three to four inches, and of equal dimensions all the way around. The kid is fine, smooth and neatly sewn. It costs $1.50.

SUGGESTIONS FOR A SOUTHERN TRIP

What better opportunity could be offered for establishing the fashion of next summer than the winter months at the fashionable resorts of the south? From now on, when whosoever can, gladly forsakes the snows and winds and cold and damp and general dreariness and inclemency of our middle northern climate, the season is in full swing under warmer southern skies, and for its dances and its dinners, its motoring, tennis, golf, and bathing, the dress is, at least below St. Augustine, the dress of summer. Why not the dress of next summer in the north instead of that of last? This is apparently the question many of the smart tailors and haberdashers have been asking themselves, with the result that one need no longer get out one's old flannels and summer sack suits and straw hats, and light shirts and shoes, but may go out and buy everything one needs, fresh and in the latest style, so far as the said tailors and haberdashers and hatters are able to determine on it. One must not, however, expect any great changes in masculine attire, for the difference in styles between one summer and the next are rarely marked, even when the full quota of months has run its course. Indeed, during the last few years the variation has been so unnoticeable that one might almost have worn one's old clothes over again. Indeed, as time goes on, we seem to follow less strictly certain prescribed forms, and to be permitted a greater freedom of individuality. This is as it should be, and so it will be at Palm Beach, Nassau, the Bermudas, and other places where men of varying degrees of social smartness wear their new summer clothes, bought for the occasion, or their old summer clothes, resurrected from their wardrobes, as the case may be.

What to take on a trip to the south depends very much upon where one is going, how long one is going to stay, and what one is going to do, but to consider first the generalities, there is the ubiquitous dress suit, and the no less ubiquitous dinner coat. Short of the primæval wilderness, man does not move without them. In the warm climates the lighter weight their material the better. That is the theory, but in practise comparatively few men have both summer and winter evening clothes, and the temperature even in the far south is rarely warmer in January than in the north in July. In other words, one will take the suits one wears here, and if the cloth of both is the same, one pair of trousers will do for both. One will need there exactly the same accessories in the way of haberdashery, etc., as in the north, and if a month be taken for the trip, from six to eight evening shirts, a half dozen white ties, three or four white waistcoats, a couple of dozen collars of various styles, two or three pairs of white gloves, evening shoes, and a black tie or two, should be sufficient. One does not leave laundries behind, and it is always a mistake to over-pack.

WHITE FLANNEL COAT

Other clothes of formal character are quite unnecessary. A black or dark gray morning coat, while not essential to good form for any occasion that is likely to present itself, may be advisable, but the frock coat will be of no more use along the southern coast of Florida at this season than along the coast of Maine in midsummer. As here during the warm months sack-suits are the foundation of day dress—blue serge, gray worsteds and homespuns, tweeds, flannels, anything suitable for the climate—and, while two or three may suffice for the trip, the more, within reason, the better. White flannel is especially good for the far southern resorts, and the coat shown by the accompanying drawing illustrates a style of semi-extreme design. Not that the double-breasted cut is more fashionable than the single, but one particularly good for this material. And as to the single-breasted model, if one takes interest enough in dress to want to wear at Palm Beach this winter the most exclusive style of next summer, have the collar narrower, and lapels smaller, and length a little less than at present. This is, of course, nothing more than a prediction, but it must not be called unimportant, for smart dressing depends upon being a little ahead, not simply abreast of the fashion, and it is only in such trivial matters that there is ever any change in the styles for men.

In speaking of light summer clothes for a southern trip, it must be understood that reference is made to the far south places, not to the Carolina and Georgia resorts. At St. Augustine warm attire is frequently necessary, and even way down the coast it is well to have at least one heavier suit. However, as one starts from the north in a winter suit, and with at least a medium weight overcoat, this matter is provided for.

The soft front shirts of summer, of which six or eight will be quite enough for a month's stay, are the shirts for the south, and white, light gray, light tan, pink, blue, and silks, with white cuffs, like that shown, but not necessarily with the wide or narrow turn-back effect, are especially in vogue. While the fine French flannels are pretty, and, of course, more or less worn, the flannel shirt craze of last summer did much to hurt the fashion, and if one seeks exclusiveness in other materials, one must go to the expensive shops for new and uncommon effects of weave, design and coloring. It may be as well to wait and see what the spring brings forth in the way of new shirtings, but the hints as to silks and flannels may be taken as applying to next summer's dress in the north, as well as to preparations for a present month's jaunt to more balmy climates.

It is hard to refrain from mention of the "new" soft front shirts with stiffened dicky bosoms while on the subject, but as it hardly seems possible that a warning note need be sounded to keep any man from wearing one. I may pass on to the white buckskin shoes shown by the other illustration on this page. White shoes are not new, but seem to have gained a permanent place in the list of summer fashions, and with white flannels are undoubtedly smarter than tan or black leather. One cannot do better than include them among the things to take on a trip to the south.

SOFT FRONT SHIRT WITH TURN-BACK CUFFS

A great deal might be said of special things for particular requirements, but as the styles for tennis, golf, fishing, riding, motoring, etc., in the south are practically the same as the summer fashions everywhere, they really require no detailed description. A straw hat, a few caps, a light sweater, some summer ties, a handkerchief stock, perhaps, and with one's flannels and soft shirts and bathing suit every ordinary want may be satisfied. How.

Advantages of Low Tension Magneto and Make-and-Break Spark as Employed on the Model H

STUDEBAKER

"The Automobile with a reputation behind it."

WE have amply demonstrated, during the past season, that the ignition system as employed on our new Model H Car is absolutely reliable and effective.

The Simms-Bosch low tension magneto, which we use to furnish the current for our make-and-break spark, gives an extremely large and hot spark in each cylinder.

This is the identical type of magneto employed on the winning cars in the recent Vanderbilt international road races, and when gear-driven, as in the Studebaker car, we have found its service to be practically perfect.

In furnishing the current for the make-and-break spark with our low tension magneto, less than two feet of wiring is required, short circuiting troubles are avoided and spark-plug annoyances are eliminated.

All the controlling mechanism of our ignition system is located on the top of the cylinders and is readily accessible.

Every part of the Studebaker Car is the result of long and painstaking experience. Our improvements have all been for better service, not for exploitation.

See our exhibit at the New York and Chicago shows.

CONTAGIOUS RESTLESSNESS — THE MODERN HOUSE OFTEN SUGGESTS A TOMB — RUDE MANNERS — NEW YORKER FETED — RICH BUT UNNOTICED STRANGERS IN NEW YORK

PErhaps it is a relief to be again away from rain and fog and speeding towards a land that at least if it is not tropical, still is comparatively pleasant and livable. It has only been in the last few years that New Yorkers have become such nomads, in the days gone by, we were content to stop in one place for at least six months. There is a certain restlessness which is contagious. No sooner are you settled in town, before you meet this or that friend who is on the eve of sailing or of journeying to a distant country, and you take the fever and must be off immediately.

Our friends from other cities and lands tell us that we have developed this trait in such a degree that it is rare now to find a home in New York. The houses are all like hotels or clubs or temporary stopping-places. There is not the least suggestion of home in them, as they are all built and arranged for entertaining. It is sometimes a puzzle to know where the family really live. The old type of the New York house was certainly characteristic. You see it still in Philadelphia and in Boston and in other adjacent cities, a bit modified but still a suggestion of the past. It was a great hospitable house with a wide hall and drawing rooms, and dining-room on the same floor. The second story was devoted perhaps to a library in the front,—a favorite apartment in even smaller New York houses—and known as the living room, and many comfortable bed chambers. You can find this now in the country but not in town except in the older portions, and street by street, the mansions and residences of other days are fast disappearing. I confess the brown stone era was not one to be desired, and I fear we would be most cramped n the residences where people lived and entertained in the thirties and forties. The one row on the north side of Washington Square and the dwellings in that part of New York where your friends are living still, loath to give up surroundings which have associations, are perhaps the best examples of a period when receptions were held on New Year's day, and a daughter of the house was brought out at a dance at home with a buffet supper and an orchestra of three to play for the quadrilles and polkas.

We think now only of certain periods, and artistic effects and we build ourselves dreary mansions fashioned after castles and chateaux and palaces; or in the style of the most hideous Georgian and Jacobean periods, and are delighted with our new toy for a short time, and then we tire of it, take our household gods and move a mile or more further towards the Harlem and the Bronx. Some of the new residences in New York are absolutely uninhabitable. I know of more than one which suggests a tomb and where everything is sacrificed for the ballroom and vestibule, and where the owners are at home only about two months out of the entire twelve.

Now and then one sees a departure and the most original houses are built by the millionaires from the middle and far west. However, incongruities spring up all through the vicinity of New York, and I have in my mind a great city house, built flush with the street and an Italian garden with pergolas and other importations, standing in the heart of a village, while on the surrounding hills overlooking a glorious river there were numerous sites for the most beautiful of suburban estates.

But we are rushing away from all of this now. And yet the architectural nightmares pursue us and in nearly every large town, we see numerous examples of the species of dwelling made popular in certain publications, half-colonial, half English or Italian or even with a suggestion of the Orient. The old joke of the house with the Queen Anne front and the Mary Ann back has had its day, and these villas are examples of the renaissance which took place after the Centennial.

But otherwise, the more miles we place between ourselves and New York, the more we find that a spirit of greater entente cordial exists, and that of commercialism disappears. In New York, we have only time to give and take. Some one recently referring to the holidays which have passed, has suggested that perhaps it was more blessed to give than to receive, because the latter condition placed you under so many new obligations.

My English guests have amused themselves criticising their own people. There is no doubt that the traveling middle class Englishman is a positive boor and unfortunately he is to be found in vast numbers all over Christendom, and the English are judged rashly and with injustice, from this standard.

Vanity Fair—and we have been reading that amusing periodical—begins an essay on this very subject with the following apt sentence "An exalted personage, whose own manners are a shining example to the rest of the world, once remarked 'Expect politeness from an Englishman, but do not expect manners.'" The article apologizes for him, by stating that he means well but that he is shy and bashful, and that his lack of manners is due somewhat to timidity. I do not like people who mean well. They do more mischief than any others in the world. To be trite, you can always stand a knave but never a fool. Vanity Fair immediately after remarks that "The Englishman who would never think of calling on a lady in London, attired in a tweed suit with a bowler hat, will cheerfully commit that sartorial solecism in foreign capitals, where certain rules of etiquette are more strictly observed than they are over here. The Briton arrogates to himself the right to ride roughshod over the opinions of foreigners, ignore their customs and endeavor to impose his own, oblivious of the fact that he is only a guest (albeit a paying one) in some one else's country."

And there does exist among the aristocracy of all nations, a certain shibboleth, a freemasonary of caste which tends to efface racial differences and produce a certain resemblance, mental and physical between the several nationalities.

And while we were on the subject of the middle class Briton and too often also his brother in a higher caste, we began to discuss the New Yorker who these days models himself on the Englishman and whose manners are just as objectionable. You see it is soon as you leave New York. Even the very railway employees are more civil and the servants at hotels are not rude and grasping and inattentive. The New Yorker comes a visitor, a most welcome guest. He is treated as if he were a messenger from Heaven. He is entertained with the most lavish hospitality, and frequently he finds himself received among people on an equality which he could have never enjoyed at home among New York friends. The word New York seems an open sesame. All else is provincial, but there is after all no place more provincial than the great city of subways and overhead railways, and playhouses and millionaires and all the rest of it. The movements of its more prominent people are chronicled with the same faithfulness as the village gazette tells of the building of a barn or the death of a cow belonging to Farmer Jones or to the exciting news that Mr. Smith of Hollow Creek is now in our midst.

But last year I pointed out a little set back for New Yorkers when they encountered the wealth of the middle east at Palm Beach. Some of these same people have now come to settle in New York and to build houses there, and I fear they too will be spoiled. The New Yorker away from home is a nuisance, and unless I know of him or his very well indeed, I make a practice of avoiding him. He is becoming as objectionable in his own country as he is abroad.

On the other hand, why all this adulation, and then why all this hopeful expectancy? The dweller in the smaller city will come to New York, at a season when every one is away, put up at a hotel and wait for hospitality. It will not be enough that we should treat these visitors as the English and French and Europeans sometimes treat us and put them off with perhaps a stray invitation to luncheon or dinner or a card to the club. We cannot keep pace with them and New York is a most selfish place. There are charming and interesting people there whom I should like to see frequently but I only run against them perhaps once in a half dozen years. Then I forget that this or that one may have been married or divorced or bereaved, and it is quite difficult not to commit a faux pas, unless one avoids anything but general subjects. We have several lists and on the occasion of a general entertainment we employ secretaries who struggle with the Social Register and are able with the aid of that invaluable volume, to locate many of our old friends whom we have not seen in years. Then when it comes to the strangers, why it is almost impossible to keep track of them. They will come in during Horse Show week or at the opening of the Opera, and then fondly imagine that they should be included in your intimate circle. In a small place, your arrival is an event. To us, their presence in New York means nothing. Possibly we may not hear of them or know that they are in town, and certainly not unless they make it known.

We are now flying through the pine woods of the Carolinas and we shall stop at Aiken. Luncheon has just been served. We are again following the semi simple diet and the menu—perhaps this is not the correct thing to do, but I am supposed to be as in a confessional and I always like to be helpful—consisted of grape fruit which was not iced nor again ruined by rum or sherry, but served in halves and each particle of pulp loosened so that it could be easily eaten with a spoon, and a bit of color added by just a thread of candied cherry. This was followed by hors d'œuvres—olives, salted almonds, small stalks of celery and radishes served with hot biscuit and toast and butter. Then creamed eggs in timbales. The next course was broiled chicken with fresh vegetables, including—as we are passing through the south—delicious little cakes of sweet potato. The salad was endive with a French dressing accompanied by cold truffled capon with pate in the aspic. A cream raspberry and chocolate pudding cold, but not iced, and fruit and bonbons and small cakes finished the repast. Sherry and white wine go with the luncheon, and coffee, liqueurs and mineral water are served after luncheon in the drawing-room of the car. We shall reach Aiken sometime this evening. We remain two days and we then go further south, but not to Florida.

WHAT THEY READ

This third volume, which can hardly be by any other author than Mr. Benson, is also a piece of fiction, though the opinions embodied are perhaps more nearly those of the author than are those set forth in the other two books. The volume opens with an account of an accident that brought the author, we are given to understand, to the very verge of death. He rallied, but later was a second time brought low. Several chapters deal with details of the illness and the feelings that accompanied it. Later the author is led to reflect upon immortality, upon God, upon the tenets of the Christian religion. He also dwells at considerable length on an unlovely nobleman who is brought to see him, talks of his brother's children, describes a harvest scene, and touches upon a variety of other subjects. The thing that is constantly somewhere in his thoughts is death, for he has been brought close to it, and it has grown familiar. This book is hardly so interesting as The Upton Letters or From a College Window, but its discussions of death and immortality have charm and interest and perhaps real importance.

(The Gate of Death. A Diary. G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

THE FIRST FORTY YEARS OF WASHINGTON SOCIETY, PORTRAYED BY THE FAMILIAR LETTERS OF MRS. SAMUEL HARRISON SMITH (MARGARET BAYARD). FROM THE COLLECTION OF HER GRANDSON, J. HENLEY SMITH. EDITED BY GAILLARD HUNT. ILLUSTRATED. CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS.

It is a very long time since so interesting and significant a social and political record as is embodied in these letters has been given to the public, and everyone concerned in the production of this book is entitled to the gratitude of the American people. Mrs. Smith, whose correspondence and journal make up this delightful volume, was the daughter of Col. John Bayard, of the Revolutionary Army. He adopted as a son his nephew, James Asheton Bayard, who became the founder of the Bayard family in the state of Delaware. Her husband was a cousin of hers, being the son of Jonathan Bayard Smith, a revolutionary officer. Samuel Harrison Smith founded the National Intelligencer at Washington in 1800, when the city was raw-new, and he took with him to the capital his bride, a girl of two-and-twenty. The Smiths were ardent Democrats (or Republicans, as the Democrats of that day often called themselves), and with the coming in of Jefferson's administration they enjoyed peculiar social favors.

These letters are in no way brilliant. It is plain enough that Mrs. Smith was not a clever person. She was, however, a sensible, prudent, self-devoted woman, with great sweetness of character, and vast stores of charity. Her judgments of public men are constantly influenced by her pleasure in their society, and her opinions on public events are deeply colored by her personal and party prejudices. With Mrs. Smith, however, bitterness seems never to have lasted long. She was greatly disappointed at the failure of her idolized Mr. Crawford to reach the presidency in 1824, and she apparently believed the scandalous stories set afloat to account for the election of Mr. Adams, but very soon we find her again hand in glove with the Clays and the other families of the Adams Cabinet.

Nothing in this book is more charming than the picture of social simplicity which Washington presented a century ago. The President called informally on Mrs. Smith, and her relation with the Cabinet families was one of neighborly familiarity. Later, she and her husband visited Jefferson at Monticello and Madison at Montpelier. Mrs. Smith notes that the Monroes introduced a severe etiquette into social life, and as time goes on the letters speak frequently of the disappointments of political ambition, and the emptiness of social display. Mrs. Smith's bill of fare for her dinner of twelve, in honor of Harriet Martineau, will astonish housekeepers of to-day.

The editor is a little severe in his criticism of Crawford, though doubtless posterity is right in thinking him of less than presidential stature. Nevertheless, nobody can read this volume without warming toward the third man in the race of 1824-1825. Indeed, the special merit of this book is that it shows us eminent public men in their gentler aspects. Mrs. Smith presents us Crawford fondling his children, while keenly anxious over the result of the pending election. Clay in tears, when she spoke a kind word to him in the dying hours of the Adams administration; Madison, wrinkled and wizened, but full of boyish gaiety, and Jefferson, whether at the White House or at Monticello, as the simple Virginia gentleman. The wives of these and other eminent men are shown in the same way. Half of the fashion of early Washington was on tea-drinking terms with Mrs. Smith. She and the ladies of the Cabinet bewailed their common affliction in the matter of bad servants. Mrs. Smith, on a sudden thought, goes out in her carryall and drums up a theatre party. She and a dozen distinguished women are at hand to help look after Mrs. Calhoun's dying infant. With all her kindness of heart, however, Mrs. Smith is like flint toward poor Mrs. Eaton.

It is impossible in the course of a short review to hint at one tenth of the delightful things in this admirable book. Among the most interesting matters, however, are the visit of four days to Monticello, the account of the burning of Washington by the British, in August, 1814, the story of the contested election of 1824-1825, the meeting with Miss Martineau, the cholera of 1832, and the mobbing of the White House on the night of Jackson's first inauguration. Fifty other topics of interest are scattered through the book, and the pages fairly bristle with historic names. The tone of the letters is peculiarly free from snobbishness, though, with growing years, Mrs. Smith bates some of her intense democracy. Nothing in the whole book, by the way, is more significant than the exhibition of manifestly sincere democracy which is given in many of the earlier letters. One realizes from these letters of a refined and gently bred woman, that Jefferson and his friends aimed at a genuine social democracy. Doubtless the editor has discovered already that his second footnote to page 157 is erroneous in saying that the sick "John" referred to in the letter from Henry Clay was Clay's infant son.

LITERARY CHAT

IN the Queen's Museum, and Other Fanciful Tales, by Frank R. Stockton, with illustrations by Frederick Richardson, the Scribners have produced a beautiful book that will also worthily serve to revive interest in one of the most quaint and delightful of our humorists. Some of these diverting stories were originally written as far back as twenty years ago, and the readers of these days, both young and old, who never knew, or perhaps have forgotten the name of Stockton, will surely find a rich mine of entertainment and charm in this book. Several of the ten fantastic tales comprised in the collection are appropriate for the Christmas season, but while each one has its peculiar interest, the two entitled respectively The Griffin and the Minor Canon and Old Pipes and the Dryad, reveal in more generous measure than do any of the others the deliciously fantastic humor of the lamented author. The book is handsomely printed and bound with an especially artistic cover design and title page. Mr. Richardson's full-page illustrations in color and the dainty head-pieces in black and white are literally a feast to the eye.

Stories From Famous Ballads (Ginn & Company) are edited by Caroline Burnite from the original tales published many years ago by Grace Greenwood. The stories tell with equal simplicity and charm of such famous old ballads as the King of France's Daughter, Patient Griselda, The Heir of Linne, Auld Robin Gray, Chevy Chace, etc. The illustrations, including the beautiful colored frontispiece, are by Edmund H. Garrett.

Miss Singleton has added to her series of cities described by great writers a volume on Rome. She opens the series of descriptions with an extract from Maeterlinck, an imaginative bit which deals with the general aspect of the city's antiquities. There follow shorter or longer articles by Isaac Taylor, Dr. Reinhold Schoener, Marion Crawford, E. A. Powell, F. R. G. S., Charles Dickens, Ouida, William Davis, Augustus J. C. Hare, Emile Zola, our own Hawthorne, Hugh Macmillan, Edward Gibbon, Frederick Harrison and others. It will be seen that all who thus conspire to describe Rome are not great writers. Nevertheless the result of the compilation is agreeable and interesting. To read this book with care is to obtain a pretty clear knowledge of Rome. The illustrations, which are really important aids to the text, are unusually fine; several, indeed, deserve to be called exquisitely beautiful. Messrs. Dodd, Mead and Company, who publish the work, have given it excellent print, paper and binding. The books of this series are published at $1.60 net.

No. 3. A few lingerie pillows will add to the comfort and beauty of this couch. Illustration No. 1 shows the cheval glass in three parts, the middle portion reaching almost to the floor as in the ordinary cheval glass, the two sides hinged so as to be adjustable.

A very useful and attractive article of furniture for the boudoir is the slipper ottoman shown in Illustration No. 2, upholstered in the rose satin and muslin and finished around the bottom with a ruffle of muslin and garlands of flowers. The floor of this boudoir is covered with a carpet of plain rose-colored velvet. A white fur rug will add to the warmth and luxury of the room.

If pictures are used in such a room one must be careful to select those which are dainty and in keeping with the scheme of decoration. Colored engravings of Bouchier and Watteau would be appropriate. One must avoid large or heavy pictures. Any personal photographs or other small pictures should be framed in simple gold or white enamel frames.

The same scheme which is here suggested in rose color may be carried out in any one of numerous other dainty colorings according to the taste of the occupant of the room. Light blue with forget-me-nots in the garlands, pale mauve with violets, lilacs or purple orchids, light green with garlands of laurel are all dainty and effective.

FASHIONS FOR ELDERLY WOMEN

GOWNS FOR SOUTHERN TRIP—GOBELIN BLUE SILK—MAUVE DINNER GOWNS—BLACK GOWNS

IN a previous letter published 3 January, 1907 I referred to the gowns I saw in a New York woman's outfit for wear at the south. Of course I hardly know where to begin to describe them they were all so beautiful. A silk voile of an exquisite shade of gobelin blue first struck my eye. It was one of the pattern robes. A great deal of heavy hand-embroidery in several tones of the old blue made a broad border at the foot of the rather full skirt, and the bodice had a rounded plastron on the front which was embroidered—with a little square yoke and the collar and transparent cuffs on the elbow sleeves of baby Irish—dyed a deep cream. The hat to go with this gown was a very smart one—medium size—turned up at the sides, and of the same shade as the gown, with two ostrich feathers in two shades of the blue, curling toward the back. To wear with this gown on cool days was a three-quarter Empire coat of cloth the same shade, with a high girdle of blue velvet.

A dinner gown was in a beautiful shade something between mauve and rose color, of chiffon cloth, trimmed with taffeta which matched it exactly. The bodice had bands of the taffeta edged with little ruches of chiffon, crossing in surplice fashion over a very fine of Bruges lace insertion. The insertion was also placed each side of the front of the skirt panel effect, accenting the long lines and heading a broad fold of the taffeta running around the skirt at the hem. A little flounce completed this costume.

Another dinner gown—a black silk—with quite a large dot in it, was made up over soft white satin (without any veiling between). A waving design around the hem of black velvet about five inches wide, made a skirt which would be useful on many occasions. The bodice was softly shaped and garnished with some handsome jet motifs. The waist and skirt were joined together by a band of the jet, with a handsome jet buckle in the back. The transparent neck and collar were of black lace, very sheer, and the lower part of the elbow sleeves and a border around the top of the velvet on the hem of the skirt were of the same material. A small jet bonnet with some black osprey tips on the side was designed to go with this costume, also one of the fluffy black tulle ruffs, which are so becoming they ought never to go out of style.

Over the arm of a chair was hung the dearest little breakfast jacket of baby Irish, with festoons of French ribbon work in Dresden colors embroidered on it. The lining was of ciel blue silk. Another woman's wardrobe, one in mourning showed pretty things and a three-piece costume of black amuré silk was especially pretty. As the owner was a small, short person, the main idea had been to give her length of line. The skirt was a circular one fitting easily around the hips, with a double box-plait front and back, and just a broad hem nearly a foot deep of the material at the bottom. It fell gracefully, touching the ground all around, being an inch or two longer in the back. The coat was a short one, tight-fitting and cut away from a small waistcoat; hand-embroidered in black silk, the collar and cuffs embroidered too, but the whole effect was simple and depended mainly for the good effect on the perfection of cut, fit and detail. The bodice, worn with this was of black chiffon cloth, and the silk combined. The chiffon in tiny hand tucks around the neck, and a fold of handsome black lace shaped over the shoulders and brought down back and front with the girdle of silk. The sleeves were of the silk, the lower part being of hand-tucked chiffon. Tiny roses of chiffon were used as buttons here and there on the waist as trimming. A small black bonnet of chiffon and silk completed this sensible outfit.

Handsome ball gown for a matron. Silver gray satin and lace tinted to match. Dog collar of pearls.

Suggestions for a costume suitable for an elderly woman could be had from a charming woman of eighty I met. She wore a cap which was of tulle so soft and white! and the dearest, most becoming shape, with rosettes, two of white baby ribbon on each side, the frock was plum-colored a rich deep shade, and of heavy silk, made full and long, and the waist very simple with some old lace draping the neck in a little V.

THE HONEY-MOON BEGINS

"Shall I, Bob?" demanded Tom, at the top of his voice.

Leighton was leaning forward against the whipping wind, his watch close to his eyes.

"My train has gone," he announced with uncanny calmness. "You can stop when and where you like. But if we live through it, I shall pummel every one of you within an inch of your lives—damn you."

In the midst of explanatory protests, the car swerved to the right, staggered, jumped—up—up—up! It was a fearful feeling. Leighton's next one was of something wet and cold trickling about his neck.

"Rita!" he murmured, in a daze. "Rita!"

"Thank heaven! He is not dead!" someone cried, hoarsely, and he wondered who was talking and why they seemed so far off. Another dash of cold water made things clearer.

"Run to the brook again!" he heard Tom Kent order. "George, you take a look at that cussed chug cart and see—hurry with the water! I think he is going off again!"

He was. When he came back, his first clear thought was of revenge. He started up, but fell back weakly and lay with closed eyes while the three brothers blundered about with masculine unfitness for the task. When they endeavored to move him to an easier position, he groaned piteously.

"My God!" cried Tom, staggering back. "He is hurt bad!"

"Internally!" whispered Sam hoarsely.

"Think of Rita!" gasped George, his face ghastly in the moonlight. "Think of bringing Bob back to her injured for life—or dying!" Think of——

"Shut up!" growled Tom. "This is a nice time to begin to think! Now is the time to act—we have the rest of our lives to repent in! Sam, you take care of Bob while we see if we can start that confounded machine. You are not hurt very bad, old fellow!" he questioned compassionately.

Bob's lips moved, but his only answer was a moan, and three frightened faces bent tenderly over him; then Tom and George made a dash for the car, canted high on the sand heap, and with one accord attacked it.

"I think she will move!" said Tom half doubtfully, after a hasty examination.

"She has got to!" declared George grimly, thinking of the endless sand and failing to remember a house within four miles. "If she does not, Bob will——"

He did not attempt to finish, but worked harder and faster than ever before in his life. Twenty minutes later, Tom, tired and greasy as his brother, started the engine with an unnatural sputter and cough and in some miraculous way coaxed the machine into the road. As tenderly as possible they lifted the victim of the wedding joke and attempted to make him more comfortable on the back seat.

"Great heavens!" ejaculated George. "If we touch him anywhere it puts him in agony! I should think every bone in his body was broken."

"Have not a doubt of it!" agreed Sam, with gloomy conviction.

"I would give everything I possess if he would only stand up and give me my thrashing now!" burst out Tom feelingly.

"Me too!" cried the brothers in chorus, and the self-accusations continued as the car moved homeward at a snail's pace. In spite of all they could do, it would only crawl—with strange starts and sulky stops

"I suppose we should be thankful that it moves at all," said one of the boys. "But this pace is simply nerve-racking! He could die twenty times over before——"

"U-h! U-h!" groaned the bridegroom "I guess—I am—done for, boys! But—we—all—have—to—go—sometime! I—forgive—home—Rita!" his voice trailed off into another groan, and three faces blanched whiter as the boys asked penitent, remorseful questions which were seemingly unheard. When Bob's lips finally moved again, it was to give them some heart-rending "last messages" and to repeat his forgiveness.

Not until they entered the wooded drive which led to the bride's home, did any of the Kent boys speak again, and then it was Tom, as he stopped the auto with a jerk.

"We are almost there—how can we ever tell them—how can we ever tell them?" he burst out. "Who is going to—break it?"

FETCHING NEGLIGEE OF DOTTED SWISS AND LACE
From The Boudoir Company

"Break what?" demanded an angry voice startlingly near—and Rita's father stepped from the shadowing trees.

With the gentleness of a thunder-bolt from a clear sky, the boys did it all together.

"Bob's hurt! Dying! We have killed him!" they blurted.

"What!" Mr. Lowe's hand went to his heart and he literally staggered under the blow. "No! No!" he managed to articulate. "Not Bob! You cannot mean Bob—Rita's husband——" he choked, and the next instant was bending close over the limp figure in the car. The silence grew painful before he straightened up and looked sharply at the averted faces of the grief-stricken Kent boys.

"I must—break it—to Rita—before you come up the drive!" he said, in an odd, broken voice, as he stepped down and disappeared in the shrubbery. Five minutes later he met the silent procession at the hall door and assisted in carrying the injured man to an upper room.

"We may wait?" begged Tom. "We have got to know how badly—we cannot leave until—"

"If you really wish it, you may go down and sit in the library," consented Mr. Lowe coldly.

They waited there, with the cheerless gray dawn streaking through the windows. Hurrying footsteps, telephone calls and a general bustle overhead came to their strained ears. Finally a cab dashed up to the side entrance.

"The doctor—thank heaven!" exclaimed Tom with a heart-felt sigh of relief.

The early morning sun struggled up and peeped in the windows at three haggard brothers in soiled shirts and disreputable dress suits, who listened apprehensively whenever footsteps passed and repassed the room—but did not pause.

When at last Mr. Lowe came in, cold and stern, they fairly begged for tidings—tidings of any kind—but he sadly informed them that there seemed to be nothing definite to say.

"We ought—we must go home n[illegible]" said Tom, finally. "But of course we [illegible] return almost immediately—and stay! C[illegible] we not—could we not—see him—just [illegible] an instant—before we go?"

Mr. Lowe looked searchingly in [illegible] face and considered for a long moment [illegible] he replied.

"I am afraid not!" he said, slowly. "You see, he is not here. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Leighton left on their wedding tour just before daylight this morning—in a cab!"

"What!" yelled the dumbfounded brothers, advancing upon him, "You mean—you do not mean—is he not hurt? You let [illegible] think——"

This time Rita's father laughed—and was echoed from the hall.

"We have been on the rack—in positive anguish—for hours!" shouted Tom, trembling with indignation. "I must say, Mr. Lowe, that I do not see the joke!"

"My boy," replied the old gentleman gently, "Bob did not see yours, either.

and eighteenth century structures, among them the buildings of old William and Mary College, redolent of history, and of a time when the invincible devotion of Virginia lads to active sports of a kind not now usually included in college athletics, led the authorities to forbid any student to keep a race horse.

He that has really seen Williamsburg and Yorktown will have probably for the first time in his life a vivid notion of what Colonial Virginia was, but he may broaden and sharpen this impression by a visit to the Potomac region. This he may reach by boat from either Baltimore or Washington, and either of these places he may reach from the Exposition by water, with ease, speed and comfort. If he approaches the Potomac region by way of Baltimore he will wake early to find himself in one of the delicious sunny little harbors of the Virginia shore. While he slept his steamer has run many miles up the Potomac, and has wormed her way deep into one of the winding tributaries of the great river. The mocking bird sings ashore, and the shining, land-locked waters extend in lovely bays and inlets on every hand. It is the birth-county of George Washington. Not far away, in a lonely field overlooking the lazy flood of the Potomac, is the fine shaft that marks his birthplace. All the land is filled with the memory and tradition of the man, and men and women of his name still live in the county. The country looks in many respects much as it must have looked when the infant George first opened his eyes upon it one hundred and seventy-five years ago. The very corncribs of logs that you may see on the way to his birthplace must be just such as stood upon his father's farm.

When the steamer leaves the enchanting shores of the Old Dominion the visitor finds himself in that fascinating old Catholic Maryland, where villages and streams still bear the names of saints, as St. Mary's, St. Clement's, St. Inigo's and the very negroes profess the ancient faith. Queer little Leonardtown in Breton's Bay, a lovely, deep inlet of the Potomac, is the seat of an ancient nunnery, and not far away is an old Catholic school. At the mouth of the St. Mary's is a retreat of the Jesuits, a great, comfortable-looking old house, standing on a breezy cape, amid its pleasant gardens. Just across the river on a bold promontory is the seat of the first Maryland custom house, and a few miles up the river is St. Mary's, the beautifully situated old Capital. To see St. Mary's one should make the return trip from Washington to Baltimore by boat, for then the voyager reaches the town by daylight, and the sail up and down the St. Mary's in the late afternoon or early evening is a thing hardly to be matched for beauty anywhere on the Atlantic coast. There are half a dozen other voyages of the same kind that serve as historical documents for those who know our colonial story only at second hand from books, and it is a pity that the visitor to the Jamestown Exposition should not take the opportunity to know as much as possible of this delightful and unique region. For such visitors the Exposition will mean a renewal of patriotism, and a better acquaintance with the strength of the present and of the past.

Among all the cosmetic substances yet discovered by the patient experiments of skilled chemists, nothing exceeds cucumber juice, said by eminent physicians to be the chief beauty-maker of the vegetable kingdom. It possesses the remarkable property of agreeing with all complexions, which can be said of few substances; and so marvelous are its whitening and refining powers that it has been erroneously credited with containing "natural arsenic."

Hitherto it has been so difficult, often indeed impossible, to obtain any lotion or cream containing this valuable cosmetic that many women, desirous to experiment with its so highly extolled virtues, have been compelled to make them at home.

These will be glad to know that cucumber juice is one of the ingredients in the justly-famed the most exquisite and agreeable preparation which has ever been devised for woman's use.

The perfumed water entering into its composition is that distilled from orange blossoms, famed always among the beautiful daughters of sunny climes as possessing almost magical properties; as a perfume not merely charming the senses, but calming the nerves; and mingled in lotions for hair and skin credited with being a corrective and stimulant. No animal fats or mineral bleaching agents are contained in it.

It is a most skilful blend of bland, nourishing oils and healing therapeutic agents, all of guaranteed purity; and it keeps indefinitely, without deteriorating in the least or losing its dainty fragrance.

At a half-dollar the pot. Tubes at a quarter. Pound cans at 75 cents. At the busy shops everywhere.

LA GRECQUE TAILORED UNDERWEAR

Combined Skirt and Corset Cover

eliminates bunched disfiguring fullness of overlapping garments. Fits smoothly over entire figure without drawing strings or gathers.

Does away with adjusting numerous garments. Very durable—the seams are double-stitched and flat-felled. All insertion and lace put in so well that mending will be unnecessary. A clean, smooth fit around hips and waist diminishes outer dress measurements and accentuates beauty of waistline. Scalloped around the bottom for perfect freedom in walking and sitting—so well shaped it cannot work up.

A most shapely, practical garment that will outwear two or three ordinary garments.

THE HIP-FORM HEALTH SKIRT For Slender Women

A Masterpiece of Petticoat Making

That day is past when the slender woman, because of her slenderness, must limit her choice of gowns to a few conventional styles.

To-day she wears a Hip-Form Health Skirt and her range for choice is boundless. The gracefully perfect figure it gives permits her to wear any gown in vogue, even the Princess, most effectively.

The great feature of this new Petticoat is that it does not conspicuously change your appearance. The padding, which is distinctly a part of the skirt, is so ingeniously constructed that it distributes itself over and around the hips; overcoming faults, lending grace and symmetry, but always perfecting only the natural lines of your figure.

Thousands of slender women in all parts of the United States are wearing the Hip-Form Health Skirt. In New York and the other large eastern fashion centers, it has been an instantaneous success. The busy stores in your city sell them, or if you wish, we will send you one direct. Prices, $2.50 to $7.50.

Made in Silk, Heatherbloom, Clematis, Arbutus and Sateen.

LABLACHE

FACE POWDER

Perpetuates Youth

Mrs. J. B. Zook, of Warsaw, O., writes: "Have used your Lablache Powder for twelve years. I can honestly recommend it. My flesh is too tender to use any other. I am always taken for a woman 10 or 15 years younger than I really am." Lablache Face Powder is pure and healthful. It is a marvelous beautifier and prevents wrinkles, sallowness and other indications of old age.

Refuse substitutes. They may be dangerous. Flesh, White, Pink or Cream, 50c. a box, of druggists or by mail. Send 10c. for sample.

I have changed the name of DEODORA to SWEET BRIAR Dusting Powder

Jean Carrington

Some years ago after long experimenting, a famous French Physician prepared a deodorizing powder for a patient who as a result of some nervous disorder had for years been affected with malodorous perspiration, and had been frequently compelled to absent herself from society because of it. Its peculiar chemical properties brought immediate relief, and the powder soon became a necessary feature of the toilet tables of the Royalty and Aristocracy of Europe.

I have used this delightful prescription myself and knowing its great value, have privately prepared it for many leaders of American Society. No matter how difficult or unpleasant the case may be SWEET BRIAR removes instantly every odor, imparting instead a fresh, delicate fragrance to the skin. Its effect lasts for hours.

I have prepared a limited amount for American women who appreciate the value and necessity of always being fragrant and sweet even under the most trying conditions. Every particular woman should have SWEET BRIAR on her dressing table, and use it daily as a deodorant or toilet powder. It is conveniently used in the Powder Puff or sifting box.

SWEET BRIAR is prepared only by myself, daintily packed in purple and gold boxes and privately addressed to you. Write to me enclosing one dollar for a four-ounce trial box, you will be delighted with SWEET BRIAR. Every woman who has used it wants me to keep her constantly supplied.
